St. Andrew's School opened its 26th fall term yesterday, with an enrollment of 150 boys, the return from sabbatical leave of William H. Amos and the addition of three new masters to the faculty Christopher G. Boyle, Arthur S. Timmins, and Basil M. Duncan.

During his year's absence Mr. Amos was on the research staff of the University of Delaware Marine Laboratories engaged in a biological survey of the entire Delaware River. Mr. Amos is at present editor of the new Estuarine Bulletin. He has just completed six booklets on natural history subjects illustrated with color photographs for the National Audubon Society. He has finished a guide to aquatic animals for use in secondary schools and his full-length book will be published by Random House next year. While away Mr. Amos received his master's degree from the University of Delaware.

Mr. Boyle comes to St. Andrew's from Worcester School, Worcester, Mass., where he has been teaching for the past year. Previously he was a member of the faculty at St. Stephen's School, Austin, Tex. He has coached football, basketball, track. Mr. Boyle is a graduate of the Thatcher School and Amherst College, where he was a member of Beta Theta Phi and was active as a member of the Glee Club and the varsity basketball team. He will teach here.

The second new master this year is Arthur S. Timmins a Yale graduate, who will teach chemistry and mathematics. He was a high jumper for Yale's varsity track team and a member of the swimming team. Mr. Timmins was just recently released from the U. S. Army, where he was working on guided missiles.

Basil M. Duncan, who is the new member of the modern languages department, received his B. A. from Hampden-Sydney College and his M. A. in French from the University of Richmond. In college he was active in literary societies and was a member of Kappa Alpha Fraternity. He has taught in Kempsville High School, Princess Ann County, Va., At St. Andrew's he will teach French and Spanish. All three new masters are married.

The new wing on which construction was begun last spring and which will add about 50 per cent to the size of the present main building, is now well under way and will be ready for occupancy next fall.

St. Andrew's School To Celebrate Silver Anni.

The Very Rev. Dr. James K. Pike, famed dean of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine in New York, will give the principal address at the silver anniversary celebration of the dedication of St. Andrew's School, near this town.

Dean Pike will speak at the 11 a. m. outdoor convocation on Saturday, Oct. 15, at which the Rev. Dr. Walden Pell II, the school's headmaster since its founding, will give his report.

Following the convocation there will be a cornerstone laying ceremony for the Irene duPont Library which is part of the new $950,000 addition to the main building.

At 3 o'clock in the afternoon there will be a football game between St. Andrew's and Wilmington Friends School.

The day will be part of the three-day celebration which opens on Friday, Oct. 14, the actual anniversary of the dedication of the school founded on a 350-acre tract between Noxentown and Silver Lake about two miles from Middletown.

It was founded by the late A. Felix duPont on the foundation that "St. Andrew's should provide secondary education of a definite Christian character, at the minimum cost consistent with modern equipment and the highest teaching standards."

At the time of its founding the Delaware Church School Association was chartered to administer it by a group headed by the late Rt. Rev. Philip Cook, bishop of the Episcopal Diocese of Delaware. It was Bishop Cook who dedicated the school on the 10th anniversary of his consecration as bishop.

Dean Pike is a member of the California bar entitled to practice before the U. S. Supreme Court who was ordained following his service as a Naval officer in World War II. He was chaplain of Columbia University before his appointment as dean of New York's cathedral. He is the author of a number of books in both the fields of law and religion.

Delicate Photographic Feats Described to Club

Delicate feats in photography were exhibited and described last night to members of the Delaware Camera Club in their monthly meeting held at the Delaware Art Center where the speaker was William H. Amos, an instructor at St. Andrew's School and Research Associate at the University of Delaware Marine Laboratories, Lewes.

In his treatment of the subject "Photographing The Unseen," the speaker showed photos of insects taken under extremes of magnification in order to bring out in color pictures, details of structure not apparent to the naked eye.

These photographic specimens, used for insect study were photographed on land, in water, under water, on the desert and in sand dunes.

On Oct. 14 at Blue Rock Community Center there will be a meeting of the print section and a display of slides.

The club has inaugurated a new series of talks which are designed especially to interest and instruct beginners in photography. These talks are actually a course in phases of photography. The first of these will be given in connection with the Oct. 14 session. There will be a talk and demonstration on film development by Erwin Roberts.

These print sessions are open to the public and are scheduled to open at 7:30 p. m. for the lecture. The print session is scheduled for 8 o'clock.

St. Andrew's School Plans Anniversary Celebrations

St. Andrew's School was dedicated Oct. 14. On this date in 1955, the twenty-fifth anniversary of the school will be celebrated. The three-day celebration will open with an eleven o'clock service of Holy Communion, at which the Rt. Rev. Arthur R. McKinstry, retired Bishop of Delaware, will be the preacher.

Outdoor Convocation

On Saturday, Oct. 15, an outdoor convocation will be held. The Rev. Walden Pell II, headmaster, will review the twenty-five years of the school history, and there will be greetings from representatives of alumni, parents, secondary schools, colleges, the town of Middletown, the State of Delaware, and the Diocese. The main address will be delivered by the Very Rev. James A. Pike, dean of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, New York City.

At 12:30 p. m., the cornerstone of the new library will be laid. This is part of the new wing presently under construction, which will be ready for occupancy in September, 1956. It will cost approximately $950,000. The new wing will add approximately fifty per cent to the present size of the main building. The building is being erected by the Turner Construction Company of New York City. The architect for the new wing is William Heyl Thompson, whose associate, William Gracell, assisted Arthur Brockie, the original architect for the school.

Bishop Mosley to Preach

Bishop Mosley will deliver the sermon at the special anniversary service on Sunday, Oct. 16. An organ recital in the chapel will precede the service of Morning Prayer and special music for religious services throughout the three-day period will be under the supervision of Rev. W. David Leech, chaplain, and Lewis Grubb, choir director.

A full schedule of sport and recreational events have been planned for the week end. The students and their guests from a number of other schools will attend a tea dance Friday afternoon, when George Mad-

6 Schools To Attend

St. Andrew's Dance

As part of its 25th anniversary celebration St. Andrew's School has invited girls from the following six schools to attend a tea dance on Friday, Oct. 14th: The Baldwin School (Bryn Mawr), Hannah More Academy (Reisterstown, Md.), Tower Hill School (Wilmington), Wilmington Friends School, Oldfield School (Glencoe, Md.) and the Tatnall School (Wilmington). The dance, which is being sponsored by the Social Activities Committee, will begin at 5 p. m. and feature the music of George Madden's Orchestra. A buffet supper will be served at 6:30 followed by more dancing. George Broadbent, chairman of the committee, has announced that approximately 12 girls from each of the above schools will attend.

St. Andrew's is also playing host to Archmere Academy of Claymont, whose Junior Varsity football team will play the S.A.S. team at 3:00 p. m. that afternoon. Members of Archmere Academy are also invited to stay for the dance after the game.

A football rally and bonfire will be held immediately after the dance in preparation for Saturday's game when St. Andrew's plays Wilmington Friends varsity team at St. Andrew's. A display of fireworks will be set off to conclude the Friday portion of the anniversary celebration.

den's orchestra will play. On Saturday afternoon, there will be a varsity football game between St. Andrew's and Wilmington Friends' School. The Washington Memorial band will furnish music and a demonstration between the halves. There will be an alumni banquet on Saturday evening, which will be followed by a play and motion-picture sequences, which will highlight St. Andrew's past and present.

St. Andrew's Plans 25th Anniversary

As St. Andrew's School prepares to celebrate its 25th anniversary, many activities are being planned which will evoke the school's history and review its first quarter century of progress. One of the main events of the October 14-16 week-end celebration will be a miracle play including motion pictures of outstanding happenings since the school's inception. The above mural, picturing the founder, headmaster, and other original planners of the school, will witness a scene which this painting portrays them as envisaging. The painting by N. C. Wyeth, in the St. Andrew's School dining hall, shows from l. to r.: Allan J. Henry, Walter J. Laird, the Hon. Richard S. Rodney, the Rev. Walden Pell, II (Headmaster), John O. Platt, Alexis Felix duPont, the Rt. Rev. Philip Cook, J. Thompson Brown, H. Belin duPont, and Caleb S. Layton.

The school opened on September 19, 1930 and was dedicated on October 14, 1930 at elaborate ceremonies attended by some 1,800 people. There were then five charter members of the faculty; today it includes 18 full time and 5 part-time teachers. The original enrollment of 35 boys had gradually increased at 150, and in deference to the founder's wish that St. Andrew's should never become a large and impersonal type of school, the buildings, including the new addition, have been planned for not more than 150 students. More than 1,000 boys have been enrolled in the school.

The first 10 years of the school's existence were a period of almost continuous building. Another section of the Main Building was completed in 1936, the Gymnasium in 1938. The addition now under construction will add about 50% to the size of the Main Building and will enable all boys to be housed in dormitories or double rooms under one roof. The addition will contain a large study hall, classrooms, living quarters for 56 boys, and the Irene duPont Library for which the cornerstone will be laid at a special ceremony at 12:30 on Saturday, October 15th.

The school is small enough to maintain the spirit and atmosphere of a well-regulated Christian family, and it is on this basic pattern of life that its instruction, government, recreation, and worship depend for their effectiveness. The Rev. Walden Pell, II, headmaster of St. Andrew's since its founding, has, along with the faculty, directed the school in accord with the following statement by its founder which was placed in the cornerstone of the main building on St. Andrew's Day, 1929:

"The teaching and conduct of this school are based on the Christian religion. The trustees and teachers believe that man's knowledge of right and wrong has been revealed by Almighty God and demonstrated by the life and teaching of Jesus Christ, and that man is guided by the Holy Spirit to live according to God's revelation.

Hinnant Makes Debut at Shubert

by John R. Quarles

Theater-goers at the world premier of the comedy, "No Time for Sergeants," at the Shubert last night, saw former Yale student John F. Hinnant Jr. make his debut on the professional stage.

Hinnant plays the part of a navigator who gets his plane lost while flying through an atomic explosion. In the plot development these crew members become heroes.

Hinnant is on stage throughout one scene of the second act, along with five other members of the plane's crew. He also makes a walk-on appearance as a boy scout in the first act.

To those familiar with the Yale Dramat, Hinnant is a well known actor. He has played prominent roles in four recent shows and was considered by Director Leo Lavandero as one of the Dramat's most promising actors.

Hinnant made his Yale debut in "Stover at Yale," in which he played the role of an awed underclassman. He will be remembered for his marvelous portrayal of a shaggy dog in "The Downstairs Dragon." Appearances in "Tartuffe" and "So What!" round out his acting career at Yale.

Hinnant initially tried out for his part in New York last spring vacation. He made several readings during the summer and was notified late in July that he had won the part.

Hinnant, a sophomore at Yale last year, has taken a one-year leave of absence to take part in "No Time for Sergeants," with the expectation of returning to Yale next year. He has seriously considered making a career of the theater and took this opportunity to gain practical acting experience.

His part in "No Time for Sergeants" has brought Hinnant into contact with Maurice Evans, world famous Shakespearean actor, producer of this show. He has been coached by Director Martin DeCosta, who recently directed "Plain and Fancy."

A large group of Hinnant's friends from the Yale Dramat went to the opening night performance to watch their former colleague. He was honored at an informal party after the show. While in New Haven, Hinnant is living in his last year's room at 1347 Davenport.

Rehearsals began on Broadway September 5, and the company moved to New Haven Monday.

JOHN F. HINNANT JR., 1957 relaxes before his debut in "No Time for Sergeants", which opened at the Shubert Theater last night.

281 FOURTH AVENUE
NEW YORK 10, N. Y.
THE RT. REV. HENRY K. SHERRILL, D. D.

October 5, 1955

The Reverend Walden Pell, 2ne
St. Andrew's School
Middletown, Delaware

Dear Dr. Pell,

It is with great interest that I have learned of the twenty-fifth anniversary celebration of St. Andrew's School.

I only wish it were possible for Mrs. Sherrill and myself to be present, but we have just returned from the General Convention, and then a visit to the Church of England in Australia, and as a result it is impossible for me to be away further at this time.

However I do wish to send this word of appreciation of the school and all it has meant to the life of the Church.
I have had occasion to visit St. Andrew's in connection with various conferences over the years, and I have watched its growth with thanksgiving to God for the great achievements of these years. You have given the finest type of experience and leadership, with wide vision and consecration.

So I am happy to send my congratulations to you and to the school, with the prayer that God will bless you all abundantly in the years which lie ahead.

Faithfully yours,

Henry K. Sherrill

PRESIDING BISHOP

Cornerstone Laying Held At St. Andrew's School

MIDDLETOWN, Oct. 16.—(Special).—Laying of the cornerstone for the new Irene duPont Library featured the 25th anniversary convocation of St. Andrew's School, near here, yesterday morning. The first trowel of mortar was to have been laid on the stone by Mrs. Irene duPont, the donor, but she was unable to attend because of illness. Mortar was applied by the trustees, the architect, head mason, and others designated. The Rt. Rev. J.
Brooke Mosley, bishop of the diocese, led the assemblage of more than 2,000 persons, including 250 school alumni, in the prayers of dedication. The headmaster, the Rev. Dr. Walden Pell, II, read the list of articles placed in the cornerstone.

Dean Gives Address

The Very Rev. James N. Pike, dean of the Cathedral Church of St. John the Divine, New York City, was the principal speaker at the convocation, held in the Court of Cloisters.

Dr. Pike's address drew its theme from an inscription over the entrance of an English Church, the building of which, in defiance of Oliver Cromwell and his Parliament, cost the founder his life: "To have done the best things in the worst times and hoped them in the most calamitous."

"1930 was a most unlikely time to begin a Christian school," Dr. Pike said. Not only was the depression under way; actually we had been for some decades in a depression as to the place of the Christian religion, or any religion, in education. It took some time for the depression and the other ills of the world to bring it to the attention of man that an 'onward and upward' humanism was not a sufficient basis for life. Religion as an ornament to a private school, yes; religion as 'sacred studies' to provide a one hour a week as a token of respectability and of a half-forgotten heritage, yes.
But unique indeed, for such a time, was the proclamation (to quote from the statement by Alexis Felix duPont, the founder of this school, 'The teaching and conduct of this school are based on the Christian religion: The trustees and teachers believe that man's knowledge of right and wrong has been revealed by Almighty God and demonstrated by the life and teaching of Jesus Christ, and that man is guided by the Holy Spirit to live according to God's revelation.'
Furthermore, the founders of this school meant it, as the subsequent history of the school has proven. This was indeed a case of 'the best things in the worst times.'"

"By now an increasing number of educators in both the private and public fields recognize the need of a dimension in education which humanistic philosophies do not provide. More and more it has been recognized that the learning of any field on a secularist basis is not true learning. More and more it is recognized that it is not enough for a school under religious auspices to have religion, however well taught, provided as simply a part of the total picture, with the other subjects being taught as they would be in a secular school. More and more it is recognized that, in any field, to teach about man and things without God, history without eternity, the 'is' without the 'ought' the physical without the spiritual, the natural without the supernatural, is to teach secularism—perhaps by default when not by intent.

"The challenge of our day is to carry the implications of the founding of this school into complete fulfillment in every discipline and curriculum. This school has helped lead the way in this regard. But until this ideal is fulfilled, even our 'Christian' schools are really secularist schools with religion on a released-time basis (though on the school grounds), as un-happily it is now impossible in public education.

Importance Of School

"The importance of this school will be measured by its alumni and parents in terms of what it has done and is doing for individuals. This cannot be underestimated because of the number of individuals whose lives have been profoundly influenced by all the school has represented. But the reason for a celebration like this is to hold the ideal of this school before men as a model of true education. In the degree that this school can fulfill this ideal, it can serve as a model to not only private but public education as to the full dimension of truth. Those in its leadership realize the challenge of this vocation. For them and all who broke ground for their coming, we than God today."

Dr. Pell gave a report on the 25-year history of the school; its aims, purpose, and achievements. Greetings were extended by the following:

From the Alumni: William P.
O. Clarke, Jr., '39, president of the Alumni Association. He gave a verbal salute to the school and cited the living force that is the heart of St. Andrew's. He presented to the headmaster and his wife a Steuben glass bowl as a token of the esteem of the school's more than 1,000 graduates.

From the parents: Capt. Clark
T. Abbott, U. S. N. retired, president of the Fathers' Club.
Captain Abbott expressed the admiration of the parents, both of the school and of its headmaster from the start, Dr. Pell.

Church Schools' Greeting

From the Church Schools:
Dr. Greville Haslam, headmaster of the Episcopal Academy, Philadelphia. Dr. Haslam based his greeting on the thought that an institution is but the lengthened shadow of a man, and that all the achievements that mark St. Andrew's as one of the outstanding schools in the United States are a constant tribute to the late Alexis Felix duPont, the founder of the institution.

In introducing Dr. Haslam, Dr. Pell told the story of how the headmaster of Episcopal Academy, was one of the group which, with Mr. duPont, toured the state of Delaware, selected the site of the school, and was instrumental in the selection of the headmaster.

From the schools dedicated to St. Andrew: Dr. Kenneth G. B.
Ketchum, headmaster of St. An-

THE VERY REV. JAMES K. PIKE, dean of the Cathedral Church of St. John the Divine, New York City, is shown delivering the address at the convocation during the 25th anniversary observance at St. Andrew's School on Saturday.

Guests Visit Graves

Buses conveyed guests to and from Old St. Anne's Church, Middletown, which is celebrating the 250th anniversary of the founding of the parish in 1705.
Prayers were said in the churchyard at the graves of the Right Rev. Philip Cook, first president of the Episcopal Church School Foundation, Inc.; of Alexis Felix duPont, the founder, and of Granville Hudson, a charter member of the faculty.

Following a football game in the afternoon, refreshments for the teams, their friends, and alumni were served in the trophy room of the gymnasium.

A business meeting of the alumni was followed at 7 p. m.

EDUCATION

Delaware School Observes 25 Years' Accomplishment

A quarter century of progress is being marked educationally in the Diocese of Delaware, with the observance of the 25th anniversary of the founding of St. Andrew's School, Middletown.

An ambitious program of activities has called for three days of religious, social and athletic events running from Friday, Oct. 14—actual date of the school's dedication in 1930—to Sunday, Oct. 16.

Delivering the main address was the Very Rev. James A. Pike, dean of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine in New York City.

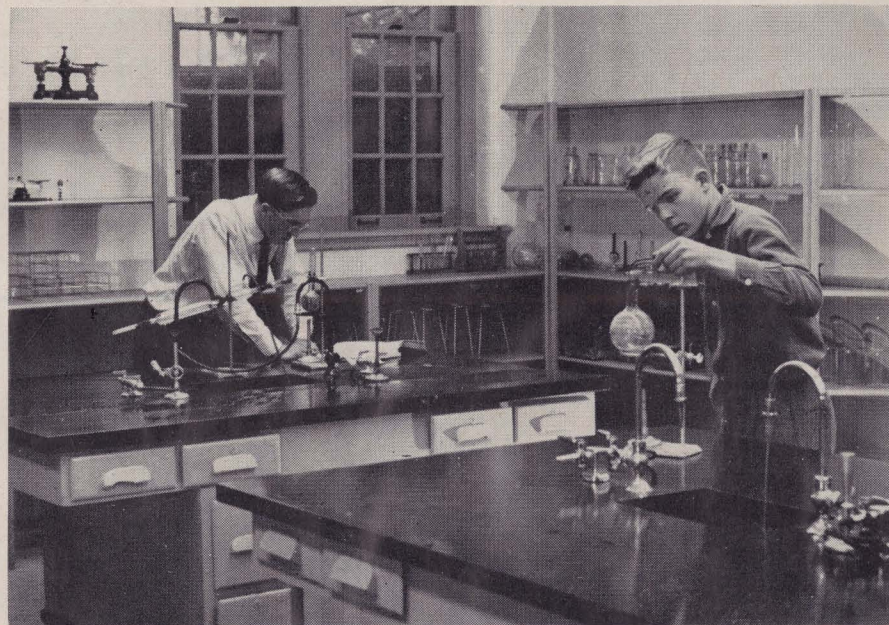

Joining him were a host of civic, educational and religious dignitaries, including Bishops Arthur R. McKinstry, retired, and J. Brooke Mosley, the present diocesan; the Rev. Dr. Walden Pell, II, the school's headmaster; the Rev. Charles Leech, president of Delaware's Standing Committee; Congressman Harris B. McDowell, Gov. J. Caleb Boggs, Dr. Gaylord Harnwell, president of the University of Pennsylvania; Dr. Kenneth Ketchum, headmaster of St. Andrew's College, Aurora, Ontario, Canada, bringing greetings from schools throughout the world dedicated to St. Andrew, and Dr. Greville Haslam, headmaster of the Episcopal Academy in Philadelphia, representing Episcopal Church Schools.

Following the convocation, the cornerstone of a new library was laid. The library is part of a new $950,000 wing being constructed. It will be named "The Irene du Pont Library" in honor of Mrs. Irene du Pont, a generous donor to the school and sister of the founder, the late Alexis Felix du Pont.

A carillon tower connecting the new wing with the present building will be dedicated to the memory of Richard Chichester du Pont, son of the founder, who died in a glider accident during World War II. He was a pioneer in the field of gliders.

Founded on the principle that "man's knowledge of right and wrong has been revealed by Almighty God and demonstrated by the life and teaching of Jesus Christ," St. Andrew's entered its official formative stages at a luncheon, Aug. 11, 1927, where it was the chief topic of conversation between its founder, Alexis du Pont, and the then Bishop of Delaware, the Rt. Rev. Philip Cook.

During 1929 and 1930 construction went forward on the beginning of a group of buildings described, architecturally, as collegiate Gothic.

The Rev. Walden Pell, II, a New Yorker, who had attended St. Mark's School in Southborough, Mass., Princeton University, and Christ Church, Oxford, as a Rhodes Scholar, and who was at that time on the faculty of the Lenox School, Lenox, Mass., was chosen headmaster. A faculty was engaged and the school opened, Sept. 19, 1930, with an enrollment of 30 boys.

It was dedicated on Oct. 14 of that year, on the 10th anniversary of Bishop Cook's consecration.

Although not officially listed as a diocesan institution, St. Andrew's has the present bishop of the diocese as president of its Board of Trustees and maintains a close Church connection. The student vestry gives about half its yearly receipts of some $1,600 to the diocese, and the school is often the site of diocesan conferences for laymen and young people.

With sacred studies an integral part of its curriculum and daily religious services held in the chapel, the school, which covers the five grades before college, fulfills its founder's concept of a place where Christian principles and teaching would be emphasized in a Church atmosphere.

A scientist, musician and classical scholar in addition to his position as vice-president of a large industrial firm, the late Alexis du Pont would find gratification in the fact that the school's high standards have produced several Phi Beta Kappas, one Rhodes Scholar, a Fulbright Award winner and numerous Doctors of Philosophy and Medicine.

In the field of professional attainment and civic distinction, St. Andrew's graduates list among their numbers a candidate for Congress, two assistant U. S. attorneys, editors of large city dailies and large-circulation magazines, five clergymen, five seminarians and several teachers in schools and colleges.

Balanced by a rounded athletic program and training in music, wood-working and art, today's enrollees, averaging 150, face a college preparatory curriculum grounding them in foreign languages, history, English, mathematics and the sciences.

Cornerstone Laying At St. Andrew's School

Laying of the cornerstone for the new Irene duPont Library featured the 25th anniversary convocation of St. Andrew's School, near here, Saturday morning. The first trowel of mortar was to have been laid on the stone by Mrs. Irene duPont, the donor, but she was unable to attend because of illness. Mortar was applied by the trustees, the architect, head mason, and others designated. The Rt. Rev. Brooke Mosley, bishop of the diocese, led the assemblage of more than 2,000 persons, including 250 school alumni, in the prayers of dedication. The headmaster, the Rev. Dr. Walden Pell, II, read the list of articles placed in the cornerstone.

Dean Gives Address

The Very Rev. James N. Pike, dean of the Cathedral Church of St. John the Divine, New York City, was the principal speaker at the convocation, held in the Court of Cloisters.

Dr. Pike's address drew its theme from an inscription over the entrance of an English Church, the building of which, in defiance of Oliver Cromwell and his Parliament, cost the founder his life: "To have done the best things in the worst times and hoped them in the most calamitous."

"1930 was a most unlikely time to begin a Christian school," Dr. Pike said. Not only was the depression under way; actually we had been for some decades in a depression as to the place of the Christian religion, or any religion, in education. It took some time for the depression and the other ills of the world to bring it to the attention of man that an 'onward and upward' humanism was not a sufficient basis for life. Religion as an ornament to a private school, yes; religion as 'sacred studies' to provide a one hour a week as a token of respectability and of a half-forgotten heritage, yes. But unique indeed, for such a time, was the proclamation to quote from the statement by Alexis Felix duPont, the founder of this school, 'The teaching and conduct of this school are based on the Christian religion: The trustees and teachers believe that man's knowledge of right and wrong has been revealed by Almighty God and demonstrated by the life and teaching of Jesus Christ, and that man is guided by the Holy Spirit to live according to God's revelation.' Furthermore, the founders of this school meant it, as the subsequent history of the school has proven. This was indeed a case of 'the best things in the worst times.'

"By now an increasing number of educators in both the private and public fields recognize the need of a dimension in education which humanistic philosophies do not provide. More and more it has been recognized that the learning of any field on a secularist basis is not true learning. More and more it is recognized that it is not enough for a school under religious auspices to have religion, however well taught, provided as simply a part of the total picture, with the other subjects being taught as they would be in a secular school. More and more it is recognized that in any field, to teach about man and things without God, history without eternity, the 'is' without the 'ought', the physical without the spiritual, the natural without the supernatural, is to teach secularism—perhaps by default when not by intent.

"The challenge of our day is to carry the implications of the founding of this school into complete fulfillment in every discipline and curriculum. This school has helped lead the way in this regard. But until this ideal is fulfilled, even our 'Christian' schools are really secularist schools with religion on a released-time basis (though on the school grounds), as unhappily it is now impossible in public education.

Importance Of School

"The importance of this school will be measured by its alumni and parents in terms of what it has done and is doing for individuals. This cannot be underestimated because of the number of individuals whose lives have been profoundly influenced by all the school has represented. But the reason for a celebration like this is to hold the ideal of this school before men as a model of true education. In the degree that this school can fulfil this ideal, it can serve as a model to not only private but public education as to the full dimension of truth. Those in its leadership realize the challenge of this vocation. For them and all who broke ground for their coming, we thank God today."

Dr. Pell gave a report on the 25-year history of the school; its aims, purpose, and achievements. Greetings were extended by the following:

From the Alumni: William P. O. Clarke, Jr., '39, president of the Alumni Association. He gave a verbal salute to the school and cited the living force that is the heart of St. Andrew's. He presented to the headmaster and his wife a Steuben glass bowl as a token of the esteem of the school's more than 1,000 graduates.

From the parents: Capt. Clark T. Abbott, U.S.N. retired, president of the Fathers' Club. Captain Abbott expressed the admiration of the parents, both of the school and of its headmaster from the start, Dr. Pell.

Church Schools' Greeting

From the Church Schools: Dr. Greville Haslam, headmaster of the Episcopal Academy, Philadelphia. Dr. Haslam based his greeting on the thought that an institution is but the lengthened shadow of a man, and that all the achievements that mark St. Andrew's as one of the outstanding schools in the United States are a constant tribute to the late Alexis Felix duPont, the founder of the institution.

In introducing Dr. Haslam, Dr. Pell told the story of how the headmaster of Episcopal Academy, was one of the group which, with Mr. duPont, toured the state of Delaware, selected the site of the school, and was instrumental in the selection of the headmaster.

From the schools dedicated to St. Andrew: Dr. Kenneth G. B. Ketchum, headmaster of St. Andrew's College, Aurora, Ontario. Dr. Ketchum, an old friend of St. Andrew's School and a frequent visitor to that institution, revealed that there are 24 schools dedicated to their patron saint, St. Andrew. Dr. Ketchum told how he had taken it on himself to notify these other schools, located throughout the world in such distant places as England, South Africa, Egypt, Canada, and Australia, of the school's anniversary. He read cables sending greetings from many of these schools including three in South Africa. He commended the school on having reached maturity in the family of church schools.

From the colleges and universities: Dr. Gaylord Harnwell, president of the University of Pennsylvania.

From the Middletown Community: U. S. Rep. Harris B. McDowell, Jr., who told of the great pride of the local community in St. Andrew's School.

Speaker For Diocese

From the Diocese of Delaware: The Rev. Canon Charles R. Leech, president of the standing committee. Canon Leech told of the great value of the school in the work of the youth of the diocese, and outlined the many other services the school makes available to the Diocese of Delaware.

From the State of Delaware: Gov. J. Caleb Boggs, the father of a graduate, J. Caleb Boggs, Jr., of the class of 1952, now at Brown University. He congratulated the headmaster on the fine record of the school and expressed the great pride of the people of Delaware in St. Andrew's. He said, "St. Andrew's has added to the brilliance of the Diamond of the State of Delaware."

Luncheon was served in the Court of the Cloisters.

Guests Visit Graves

Buses conveyed guests to and from Old St. Anne's Church, Middletown, which is celebrating the 250th anniversary of the founding of the parish in 1705. Prayers were said in the churchyard at the graves of the Right Rev. Philip Cook, first president of the Episcopal Church School Foundation, Inc.; of Alexis Felix duPont, the founder, and of Granville Hudson, a charter member of the faculty.

Following a football game in the afternoon, refreshments for the teams, their friends, and alumni were served in the trophy room of the gymnasium.

A business meeting of the alumni was followed at 7 p. m. by the alumni banquet. Chester E. Baum, Jr., '36, was toastmaster. Jesse Nalle '39, chairman of the alumni committee, reported on gifts from the alumni.

William H. Cameron, Jr., assistant headmaster, reported on an alumni questionnaire recently circulated, and William P. O. Clarke, Jr., '39, president of the Alumni Association, read a resolution by the Alumni Association expressing their gratitude to the school and to Dr. and Mrs. Pell. Mr. Clarke presented Mrs. Pell a large reception table with her name inscribed on its faceplate.

Motion Pictures Shown

At 8:15 p. m. a miracle play "A Midwinter Term's Dream," with old and new moving pictures of the school, was presented in the gymnasium.

Immediately after the play, the faculty members were at home to the alumni and their wives.

Sunday holy communion was celebrated at 8:30 a. m. The celebrant was the chaplain, the Rev. David Leech.

At the service of morning prayer at 11 a. m. the sermon was delivered by Bishop Mosley.

6 HURT AS CAR RAMS 'PRANK' ROAD BARRIER

Pre-Halloweeners Blamed For Accident at Centerville; 2 Critically Injured

"Mischievous Night" turned out to be a lot more than just mere mischief last night—sending six young people to the hospital when their car rammied a "pranksters" barricade on the Kennett Pike at Centerville. Two of the injured are in serious condition, one with a fractured skull and the other a severe concussion.

And while police were investigating this "prank," other police were busy answering complaints of broken windows, window soaping, corn throwing and doorbell ringing. One group of boys was building a bonfire on the front porch of a city home when the owner chased them.

Across the Pennsylvania state line in nearby Delaware County, six barn fires were blamed on a perverted idea of "mischief night" fun.

In one of these fires, on the Edgemont Township estate of Walter Jeffords, well known sportsman and a director of Delaware Park, 18 head of prize cattle and a large quantity of farm machinery, feed and other equipment were destroyed.

The six young people, all students at private schools in this area, were injured when their car skidded after striking the barricade of planks and boxes and overturned three times. They are:

Eleanor Smith, 17, of 4 Race Street, Richardson Park, in whose car the six were riding, suffered a severe concussion and is carried on the serious list at the Delaware Hospital. Miss Smith is a student at the Tatnall School.

Brother Hurt

William Wood, 16, of Chadds Ford, Pa., driver, is listed in critical condition at the same hospital with a skull fracture.

Kenneth Wood, 17, brother of William, received treatment for minor lacerations.

William Cox, 17, of Ocean City, N. J., who was treated for abrasions of the right hand and right ankle.

Sarafin Diaz Diaz, 17, a resident of Pinar del Rio, Cuba, held at the hospital for observation after receiving treatment for multiple lacerations of the scalp. His condition was reported as good.

William Jory, 17, of Gibson

Island, Md., was treated for brush burns and abrasions of the head and body and was admitted for observation. His condition was reported as good.

All are students at the St. Andrew's School, Middletown.

The car in which the six young people were riding was a small type European sedan, a German Volkswagen. According to State Police the vehicle was filled to capacity with the six passengers and a sizeable amount of luggage.

Wood's condition was too serious for police to interview him but they learned from other occupants of the car that the unlighted barricade loomed up in the beam of the headlights and the driver applied his brakes. He swerved the car to avoid the barrier. However, the car struck the right edge of the barricade and rolled over the edge of the highway. Police said that it overturned three times before coming to rest off the highway.

Passing motorists assisted the injured and a call from a nearby residence brought the ambulance from the Talleyville Fire Company and the County Ambulance to the accident.

At the Delaware Hospital, where all of the injured were taken by the ambulances, outside physicians were immediately summoned to assist the staff physicians and nurses.

Word of the accident reached friends of the most seriously injured and in a short time a number of students from the Tatnall School and other young people came to the hospital to leave their names and offer blood for transfusions should that become necessary.

The Rev. Dr. Walden Pell II, headmaster of St. Andrew's School was immediately notified and arrived at the hospital to assist. He was accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. William Wood, parents of Kenneth and William Wood.

"It is difficult to imagine that someone could be so thoughtless as to create a prank which has resulted in such a serious tragedy to this group of young people and their families," Dr. Pell said. "These students had been paying a week-end visit at the home of William and Kenneth Wood. They were returning to school and had left Chadds Ford in ample time to make a quiet trip to Middletown. These boys are all highly regarded by their teachers and fellow students and this needless accident will come as a severe shock to all at St. Andrew's."

"I have not notified any of the students yet about the accident but I am extremely grateful to these other young people who so graciously came here to offer blood for transfusions, should this be needed."

Dr. Pell remained at the hospital to offer whatever assistance he could.

St. Andrew's Fathers Club Guests Of School

Spent The Week-End With Their Sons Here; Officers Are Elected

Members of St. Andrew's School Fathers Club, numbering about 85, arrived at St. Andrew's Friday for a week-end on the campus with their sons. The fathers attended Saturday's classes and took part in the week-end's schedule of special events. Saturday afternoon St. Andrew's played St. Alban's in varsity football. Following the game there was a reception for fathers and their sons in the school common room.

A short business meeting followed dinner Saturday evening, when officers for the coming year were elected. They are: William B. Harned, of Allentown, Pa., president; Harold K. Wood, of Chadds Ford, Pa., first vice president; Harry H. Roland, of Millsboro, second vice president; John F. Kramer, Jr., of Chester Springs, Pa., treasurer, and Thomas J. Keating of Centerville, Md., secretary.

After a movie Saturday night, the fathers visited the faculty in their homes.

At 8:30 Sunday morning there was a service of holy communion for the whole school with the Rev. Walden Pell II, headmaster, acting as celebrant with the Rev. David Leech and the Rev. E. W. Hawkins, assisting.

The Rev. Dr. Walden Pell II, headmaster of St. Andrew's School was immediately notified and arrived at the hospital to assist. He was accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. William Wood, parents of Kenneth and William Wood.

"It is difficult to imagine that someone could be so thoughtless as to create a prank which has resulted in such a serious tragedy to this group of young people and their families," Dr. Pell said. "I have not notified any of the students yet about the accident but I am extremely grateful to these other young people who so graciously came here to offer blood for transfusions, should this be needed."

One teen-ager came off on the damaging. The city's Halloween observance got under way this morning as hundreds of school children turned out to give downtown shop windows a "spook treatment" with easily removable paint.

Injured in the Centerville accident were a Tatnall School girl and five boys from St. Andrew's School in Middletown. The boys were on their way back to school from a week-end visit in Chadds Ford.

The injured are:

Eleanor Smith, 17, of 4 Race Street, Richardson Park, owner of the car. She is in serious condition with a severe concussion.

William Wood, 16, of Chadds Ford, who was driving, in serious condition with a skull fracture.

Kenneth Wood, 17, William's brother, treated for minor cuts and released.

Sarafin Diaz Daiz, 17, of Pinar del Rio, Cuba, in fair condition with head cuts.

William Jory, 17, of Gibson Island, Md., in fair condition with brush burns and abrasions of the head and body.

William Cox, 17, of Ocean City, N. J., treated for abrasions of the right hand and right ankle and released.

Swerved Too Late

Wood's condition was too serious for police to interview him but they learned from other occupants of the car that the unlighted barricade loomed up in the beam of the headlights and the driver applied his brakes. He swerved the car to avoid the barrier. However, the car struck the right edge of the barricade and rolled over the edge of the highway. ### 4 of Riders In Small Car Badly Hurt

Private School Youths' Volkswagen Upsets On Hitting Centerville Halloween Blockade

Four teen-age boys were taken into custody today by state police, who said they admitted having built the barricade that caused a near-fatal accident on the Kennett Pike at Centerville last night.

Three of the boys, ranging in age from 13 to 16, live near Centerville. The fourth lives in Pennsylvania.

Six private school youngsters were injured — four seriously — when their tiny German Volkswagen rammed the barricade and overturned three times.

The accident was the only Mischief Night case that resulted in serious personal injury, but police were swamped with other complaints. Some residents claimed that this year's pre-Halloween "mischief" makers went overboard. State troopers in Pennsylvania reported six barns set afire by vandals in Delaware County.

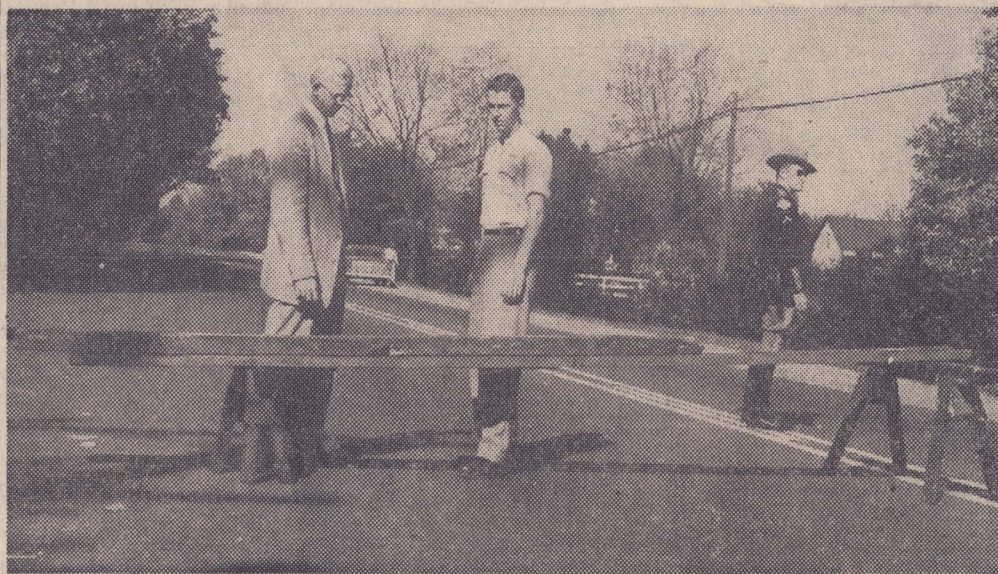

State police said the teen-agers picked up today face Family Court hearings on charges of assault and battery, malicious mischief and obstructing a highway. They are also liable, police pointed out, for prosecution on manslaughter charges if the accident should prove fatal.

Because the youths are under 18, their names were withheld. State police detectives who made the arrests said all of the boys are from well-regarded families.

The barricade, constructed of planks and sawhorses, blocked most of the heavily-travelled road's eastbound lane. It was thrown up in front of some stores at Centerville.

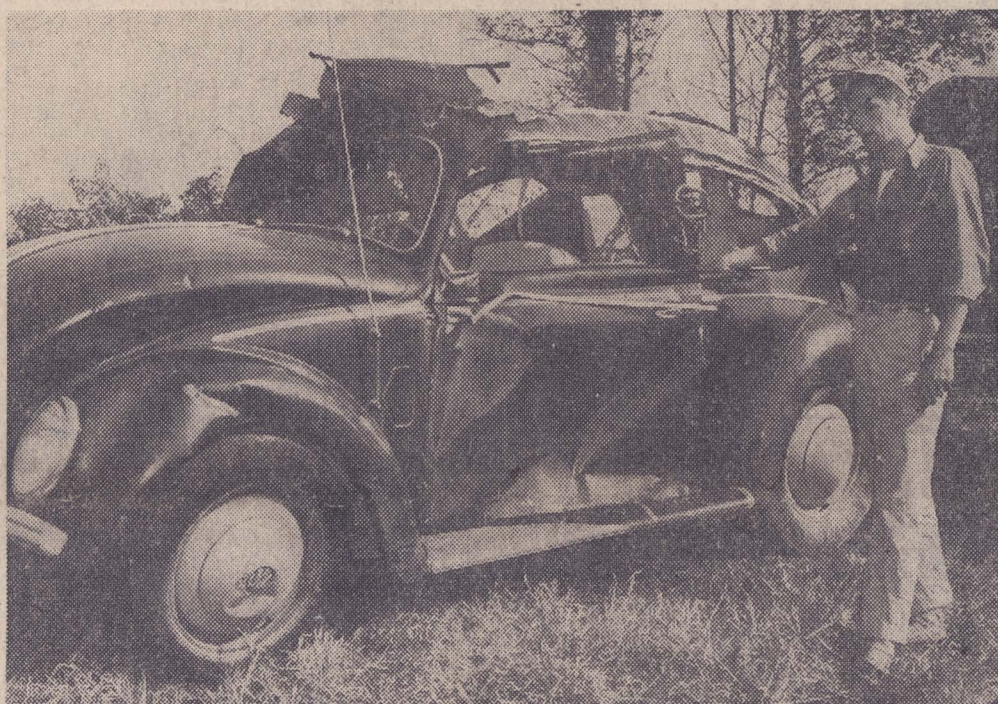

Detectives said the three Delaware youths, this morning, admitted their part in building the barricade. The Pennsylvania boy, they said, gave himself up with his parents at the Penny Hill Troop this afternoon.

Police are hoping that tonight's activities won't be as

Trapnell Named Co-Head Of Crusade For Freedom

Richard W. Trapnell III of the DuPont Company, has been appointed Delaware state co-chairman of the 1956 Crusade for Freedom by William A. Greene, the Crusade's president.

He will serve with Harry G. Haskell, Jr., chairman of Greenhill Dairies, Inc., who was previously named state co-chairman. They will organize Crusade committees throughout the state to raise funds for Radio Free Europe and the Free Europe Press.

Mr. Trapnell, who lives at 910 DuPont Road, is a trustee of the Episcopal Church School Foundation of Delaware. He attended the University of Virginia and is a lieutenant commander in the U. S. Naval Reserve.

In accepting his appointment, Mr. Trapnell declared:

"Despite seemingly friendly overtures at Geneva, the Communists are still holding millions of people captive behind the Iron Curtain. In exposing the specious claims of Soviet propaganda, Radio Free Europe and the Free Europe Press are supplying truthful information to these people and are stiffening their will to resist. The work of these agencies represents the Free World's forthright answer to the smiling 'new look' of Soviet diplomacy."

Radio Free Europe broadcasts to the five key satellite countries of Poland, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Bulgaria and Romania. As part of its news-gathering service, it monitors the Communist radio and provides an immediate answer to Soviet propaganda. The Free Europe Press sends balloons bearing newspapers and leaflets across the Iron Curtain. "By using the distinctive techniques of press and radio in a well-coordinated manner, these agencies are expanding the range of our psychological offensive against communism," Mr. Trapnell says.

"We do not know how much progress in the direction of peace and security will be achieved at Geneva," Mr. Trapnell added. "The continued Soviet domination of the satellite countries, however, is not calculated to reduce East-West tensions or bring a lasting peace to the world. We of the Free World know that knowledge is the indispensable component of freedom. The Crusade for Freedom is therefore dedicated to continue bringing truth to Communist-enslaved people until they regain their liberty."

Richard C. duPont, Jr. Is 1,000th Member of CAP

St. Andrew's Graduate
To Leave Soon; Youth Has Pilot's License

The son of a Delaware aviation pioneer, and whose mother owns a farm near here, has been the 1,000th member of the Delaware Wing, Civil Air Patrol.

He is Richard C. (Kippy) duPont, Jr. His father, who was instrumental in founding the Delaware CAP Wing, was killed in a glider crash at March Field, California, on Sept. 11, 1943.

The father, a pioneer in glider aviation, was the founder and president of All American Aviation, Inc., a corporation that later was split into two corporations, All American Engineering and Allegheny Airlines.

Young duPont received his senior CAP membership card in a brief ceremony recently during a meeting of the Delaware Wing at New Castle County Airport.

Kippy, who was graduated from St. Andrew's School in June, will have to leave local CAP activities soon. He is entering Emory Riddle College, Miami, Fla., where he intends to major in aviation business administration.

He developed his interest in aviation at an early age when he flew with his father. He started flying himself a year ago, and now has a private pilot's license. "I'm just naturally interested in it," he says.

VHF Radio In Car
His secondary interests include cars and radios. He has equipped his own car with a very high frequency (VHF) radio receiver and transmitter.

His CAP membership card is No. 23-1000. The "2" designates the Second CAP Corps and the "3" represents the state within the corps area (Delaware).

Kippy's father, early in World War II, was special assistant to the commanding general of the Army Air Corps, in charge of the glider program. He lost his life testing an experimental glider, for which he was posthumously awarded the Distinguished Service Medal.

Early Records Sketchy
Although the senior duPont is credited with being one of the founders of the Civil Air Patrol in Delaware there is no record that he was ever a member of it. The first commanding officer of the wing was Holger Hoiriis, who was later succeeded by Hugh R. Sharp. Today, the Delaware Wing has the only woman commander in the country, Col.

Louisa S. Morse.

Mr. Peter M. Brown, formerly an Assistant United States Attorney for the Southern District of New York, is now associated with our firm.

Peter M. Brown Resigns As U.S. Attorney's Aid

Peter M. Brown Taft.

Prior to joining the federal staff, Mr. Brown, 33, was a senior assistant counsel of the State Crime Commission.

After more than five years of hammering away at crime and labor racketeering, Peter M. Brown today resigned his post as an assistant U.S. attorney. He will return to private practice in the law firm of Cadwalader, Wickersham & Taft.

His resignation was announced by Paul W. Williams, U.S. attorney for the Southern District of New York. Mr. Williams said that Mr. Brown successfully prosecuted the first two federal racketeering cases in the East in the last 12 years. One case involved a $27,000 shakedown of the American Sugar Refining Co. by several officials of the International Longshoremen's Assn. (Ind.)

The second case involved a number of teamster union officials in the extortion of $64,000 from firms in the milk hauling industry.

Wilmington, and the late Mr. Bradford.

Mr. Pell graduated from St. Mark's School, Southborough, Mass., and from Princeton University in the class of 1953. He is a member of Colonial Club and the Princeton Club of New York. He holds a reserve commission as first lieutenant in the United States Marine Corps, in which he recently served two years active duty. Mr. Pell is the grandson of the late Mr. and Mrs. F. Livingston Pell of New York, and the late Mr. and Mrs. W. Roscoe Bonsal of Baltimore and Lenox, Mass.

I. L. A. GAIN SEEN IN HAYES' LEAVING

Former Investigator Tells
G.O.P. Action by Harriman
Increased Union Prestige

The former Assistant United States Attorney in charge of the Federal waterfront investigation declared yesterday that the International Longshoremen's Association was stronger now than it had been in many months.

Peter Megargee Brown, who entered a private law firm earlier this week, told the New York Young Republican Club that things were "as bad as ever" on the waterfront.

"We could have a strike tomorrow that would tie up the whole port," he asserted.

This was so, he said, because "unfortunate political interference of Governor Harriman" had weakened the Waterfront Commission.

Mr. Brown declared that until Mr. Harriman demanded the resignation last fall of Lieut. Gen. George P. Hayes as this state's member of the New York-New Jersey agency, the commission had "the racketeers of the I. L. A. on the run."

But, he said, as a result of this "cutting down of the most dedicated public servant in the war on dock crime" and Governor Harriman's appointment of his campaign manager, John P. McGrath, to the post, "the prestige of the I. L. A. leadership skyrocketed."

Mr. Brown added, "And now we see the I. L. A.—resurrected, refurbished and restrengthened—on the road again."

'Organized Shakedown' Cited

Describing the I. L. A. as "an organized shakedown with a union label," he predicted it would now be harder to break the organization's grip on the waterfront.

"It's like the theory of immunization," he said. "Once something comes through a hard time it is able to withstand even more severe sieges in the future."

Mr. Brown, who had been senior assistant counsel of the New York State Crime Commission from 1951 to 1953, described the progress made since that agency began its investigation of the waterfront three years ago. He noted:

¶That the "shape-up" method of hiring dock workers and the so-called public loading system had been abolished.

¶That licenses instituted by the Waterfront Commission had been denied to 500 or 600 "notorious waterfront characters."

¶That Federal and state prosecutors had convicted more than sixty of the most notorious dock racketeers for murder, extortion, perjury, conspiracy, payroll fraud, bribery, smuggling and tax evasion.

¶That Federal and state tax authorities had collected millions of dollars in back taxes from corrupt waterfront figures and businesses.

"The Federal investigation in the Southern District of New York alone," he said, "resulted in recommended tax fraud collections of over $2,000,000."

But despite these gains, Mr. Brown declared, the problem was far from solved, even before "political interference saved the I. L. A. from reform."

He suggested the adoption of a program to enable anti-crime forces "to get back on the track we lost four months ago."

It included:

¶Continuation of vigorous law enforcement on city, state and Federal levels.

¶Adoption of legal measures, such as court orders permitting wiretapping, and the granting of immunity to witnesses before grand juries and courts, as well as extension of the powers of the Waterfront Commission.

¶Formation of law enforcement task forces on the state and Federal levels. A twenty-man Federal unit comprised of representatives of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, Treasury Department, the Attorney General's office and the office of the local United States attorney secured the indictment of twenty-five top waterfront figures in six months, he noted.

¶Establishment of regional boards of law enforcement in which city officials would join with those of the Federal and state Governments to combat organized crime.

Mr. Brown became associated with the law firm of Cadwalader, Wickersham & Taft on Tuesday.

2 MORE U. S. STARS ARRIVE IN CORTINA

S.P.S. 743
Butler and Dodge Join Sled Team—Russia's Olympic Hockey Squad at Site

By The United Press.
CORTINA D'AMPEZZO, Italy, Jan. 14—Olympic athletes from all corners of the world, including the first Russians, trooped into this winter games site to high and work gangs, put the finishing preparations on Cortina's $4,800,000 worth of tracks, rinks and slides.

With the seventh Winter Olympics only twelve days away, official practice will get under way tomorrow morning when bobsled teams from the United States and nine other countries match their skill and courage on the precipitous Olympic slide.

The one-mile slide, described as the "most beautiful and safest I've ever seen" by the four-man world titleholder, Franz Kapus, was closed Friday. American and Italian teams had drawn protests from bobsled federations abroad when they had staged unofficial training sessions.

Arrivals today included two more American bobsledders—Charles Butler of Albuquerque, N. M., and William Dodge of New York—the Russian hockey team, the first nine members of the Japanese ski squad, led by Prince Tsuneyoshi Takeda, and two Swiss bobsled champions.

Tourists Are Ignored

The Russians drove straight to their quarters, a fortress-like hotel on the remote Tre Croci Pass four miles from here. They did not bother to have a look at the gay tourist crowd or the luxurious shops.

Canada's speed and figure skaters arrived tonight.

Tomorrow, Monday and Tuesday, the bobsled teams will have a chance to "break in" their sleds before eliminations start Wednesday.

Twenty-eight teams have been entered in the two-man event, but only twenty will be allowed to take part in actual Olympic competition. Most bobsledders spent the day polishing and sharpening their runners or walking along the sixteen banked curves of the slide.

Kapus, a 46-year-old Zurich mechanic, said he was confident he could retain his title against strong American, Italian and German competition. His statement that this was now the safest run in the world is impressive, for he spent six months in a plaster cast after smashing into a tree during the 1954 world championships on the Cortina run.

"The slide wasn't safe then," Kapus said. "But the 80,000,000 lire ($128,000) spent by the Italian Olympic committee for improvements have certainly changed things."

Tyler Approves of Run
Francis W. Tyler of Lake Placid, N. Y., manager of the American bobsled team, said he liked the run now.

After their unofficial practice run yesterday the Americans complained of too many bumps and too hard a surface.

But Tyler, who watched a work gang of forty spray the slide with water and smear slush over the embankments, said he thought there would be no complaints tomorrow.

The only discouraging part of the picture was the weather.

The temperature rose after a heavy snowfall that lasted until early this morning. Water was dripping from roofs and trees, and the snow on the roads began to turn to slush.

But the snow was still more than one foot deep tonight—not bad considering the general lack of snow in the Alps.

A slight snowfall set in again in the early evening, but the temperature was still above freezing.

St. Andrew's School To Be Host To Diplomats

On April 22-23 St. Andrew's School will participate in the Seminar for International Understanding and act as host to diplomatic representatives from England, France, Yugoslavia and two other European countries. Each speaker will discuss current political, social, and economic conditions in his country and its relationship to the United States. Each nation's role in the U. N. and the entire question of Western European unity will be focal points in the discussion. There will be ninety minute meetings for each government, with the diplomat speaking for 30 minutes and the remainder of the time devoted to open discussion. Mr. W. Lewis Fleming, Chairman of the Modern Languages Department and Director of Studies at St. Andrew's, who has been in touch with the embassies and with Mr. MacEnnis Moore, Director of the Seminar, is in charge of the arrangements. The following diplomatic representatives will speak: Mr. Jacques Andreani, Attache, Embassy of the French Republic; Mr. Peter H. R. Marshall, Aide to H. E. Sir Roger Makins, British Ambassador to the United States; and Mr. Djuro Vukolic, First Secretary, Embassy of Yugoslavia.

Mr. Andreani graduated from the "Institut d'Etudes Politiques" in Paris in 1949. He then entered the "Ecole Nationale d'Administration", which is the main school for the training of French Civil Servants, where he graduated in 1953 after performing a one-year stage in Morocco. Mr. Andreani served in the French Air Force from 1953 to 1955 when he was assigned to the French Foreign Ministry (German Affairs Office and Economic Division). He was assigned to his present post as an Attache to the French Embassy in Washington in October 1955.

Peter Marshall was educated at Turnbridge School and Corpus Christi College, Cambridge. He broke off his studies at Cambridge to join the Royal Air Force in which he served as Navigator from 1943 to 1946. On demobilization Mr. Marshall completed his studies and entered the Foreign Service as a Third Secretary in June 1949. For three years he served in the Economics Section of the Foreign Service Office in London. In October 1952 he came to the British Embassy in Washington as Second Secretary, and a few months later he was appointed Aide to the British Ambassador. In his visits to colleges and universities in this country Mr. Marshall has lectured on the British Foreign Service and on one of his hobbies, church music.

Djuro Vukolic, who was appointed First Secretary at the Yugoslav Embassy in September 1954, graduated from the Diplomatic School at the University of Belgrade. In 1947 he was appointed Second Secretary in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. From 1949 to 1953 Mr. Vukolic served at the Yugoslav Embassy in Ottawa, Canada. Immediately prior to his present post he was Secretary in the Secretariat for Foreign Affairs in Belgrade. He is married and has two children.

While at St. Andrew's the diplomats will be guests in various faculty homes.

Seminar Closed Monday At St. Andrew's School

The Seminar for International Understanding ended its final session Monday at St. Andrew's School with a discussion led by Herbert Weil, assistant information secretary of the German Embassy in Washington. In his preliminary speech, Mr. Weil stressed the fact that, although Germany is at present divided into five zones, there is in reality only one Germany. Mr. Weil stated that one should not think of Germany as divided into two separate countries, the East and the West, but as a whole unit.

However, he went on to say that since East Germany is under Russian domination, the Western Zone must represent the whole country. Mr. Weil also described other items of importance such as Germany's rebuilding program and the relationship of the Saar to German economy.

The seminar was concluded by a speech delivered by John A. Tzounis, chief of the Information Office of the Royal Greek Embassy in Washington. Mr. Tzounis spoke mainly on the Cyprus problem, giving the point of view of the Greek government. He outlined the history of the island from the time of its cession to Great Britain by Turkey in 1878 to the present day. Due to the 4-1 majority of Greeks to Turks on Cyprus, stated Mr. Tzounis, it is probable that were a plebiscite taken, it would reveal that the Cypriot populace would like to be ruled by Greece.

However, the question of what to do with the 1,000,000 Turks arises, he said. The demands of the Cypriot leaders which must be met in order to restore peace, said Mr. Tzounis, are complete self-determination, or, until such time as that may be given, complete independence.

ALABAMA GROUP OFTEN SPLIT

Local Page With State Delegation Gives His Impressions Of Convention

Max Alston, son of Mrs. J. R. M. Alston of 711 Jefferson Ave., attended this year's Democratic National Convention as an official page for the Alabama delegation. A graduate of St. Andrew's School, Middletown, Del., he will be a junior this fall at Princeton University. His impressions of the convention, written for The Anniston Star, follow.

The engagement of Miss Clara Barbara Corbett to Pfc. Norman Piers Macfarlane is announced by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Julien Furman Corbett, of Pinewood, S. C.

By MAX ALSTON
As an Alabama delegation page at the Democratic National Convention I took a personal interest in the activities of the state group, attending most of its caucuses and watching its floor activities carefully.

The most noticeable trait of this body was its lack of unity. As an alternate from Birmingham told me early in the week: "If a vote were taken now of our 52 delegates, 15 candidates would be included and some would vote for themselves."

The truth of this statement was shown on both presidential and vice presidential ballots when our delegation split its vote among six and five candidates respectively. Delegation Unites On Issues

This lack of unity in the balloting, however, did not signify the lack of a clear-cut majority on the issues of the convention. In the case of the presidential nomination, Governor Stevenson received 15½ of the delegation's 26 votes and, for vice president, Senator Gore received 12½ with the rest of the Alabama vote widely split. The semblance of unity in these votes and the unanimous decision of the delegation to stand pat on the civil rights plank, without asking for a roll call, were obtained largely by the extraordinary efforts of Delegation Chairman John Sparkman, by which he held in order the turbulent caucuses.

Chandler Gets Ovation

During its regular caucuses, the Alabama delegation was addressed personally by Governor "Happy" Chandler of Kentucky and Governor Averell Harriman of New York and by Senator Wofford of South Carolina speaking for Governor Timmerman. Of these Chandler's reception was probably the warmest. In a folksy speech he told the caucus, "Grandpappy was shot at Shiloh," called Eisenhower's foreign policy "the biggest give away in the history of mankind," and concluded with the statement that after the 1946 election "we're going to be eating breasts and drumsticks and someone else will be eating backs and wings."

After Chandler's appearance, one alternate said, "He sure didn't hurt himself any;" a delegate replied, "He sure talks the right language," and the delegation gave the ex-baseball commissioner a warm ovation. Governor Timmerman's representative asked Alabama to yield to South Carolina on the first ballot that the Governor's name might be the first placed in nomination. Senator Wofford further explained that the Governor neither hoped nor expected to be nominated for either of the nation's two highest jobs but wished to hold the votes of the Southern delegations in a bloc for release at a strategic time. He suggested that Alabama might wish to nominate her own "favorite son" but insisted that she should not pass or yield to the nomination of a major candidate.

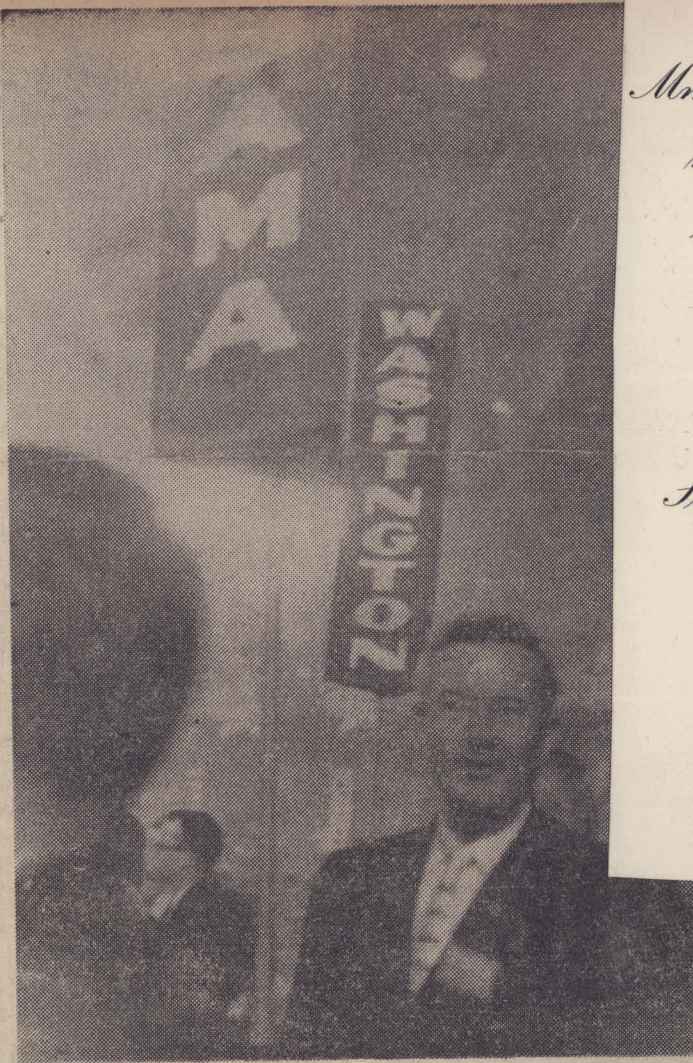

His reception was a burst of emotion from a small group of the delegates and respectful clapping from the majority. Governor Harriman's flattering speech to Senator Sparkman referring to their mutual efforts toward housing development in the U. S. and asking for Alabama's support was received with cold respect.

Civil Rights Stirs Emotion

"The most heated emotions of the delegates flared on the introduction of the civil rights plank and in the attempt to decide what Alabama should do on the first nominating ballot. It was only through the tireless efforts of Senator Sparkman to soothe the turbulence of the caucuses that either was settled. Though a majority of the delegates seemed to favor the acceptance of the civil rights plank as adopted in the committee, there was a very pronounced opposition from a certain faction or the delegation.

With time running short in the ensuing fight Sparkman managed to get the motion tabled until a later caucus at the convention where the delegates unanimously decided to make a silent stand with the other southern states allowing the floor discussion of the plank to come from other sections of the country; they also agreed not to call for a roll call on the plank. The decision of Alabama to pass on the first nominating ballot came after a turbulent outburst which found three motions before the caucus at once.

With motions on the floor to nominate our own favorite son, to yield to South Carolina, and to pass a vote was finally forced by the Chairman over the emotional speeches of the delegates and the first two motions were tabled.

SPARKMAN AT SESSIONS—Alabama Delegation Chairman John Sparkman was photographed by Page Max Alston of Anniston during the Democratic Convention. The Senator won praise of the entire delegation for the manner in which he directed the group.

They Were Calm On Floor

On the floor of the convention the emotions of the Alabama delegations were not as much in evidence and their actions often seemed calm and deliberate. During the opening night session the film on the history of the Democratic Party brought a few outbursts from them but mostly restrained applause. With calm ovations for Senator Kennedy, the Louisiana Purchase, Jefferson and Jackson, their feelings were more strongly expressed in favor of Bryan, Wilson, Roosevelt, the TVA, and the repeal of prohibition. The only noticeable derogative outburst came from a few of the delegates at the mention of Truman and the Korean War.

Governor Clement's forceful keynote speech brought the most outstanding display of pleasure from the delegation of any event of the convention. During the nominating demonstrations of the various candidates the Alabama delegation was noticeably calm and indifferent. During the demonstration for Governor Stevenson, in which almost two-thirds of the floor took an active part, Alabama's delegates were calm. A few signs, hats, and buttons were seen among the delegation, some stood up to watch, and a few marched in the parade, but the majority of the delegation sat and watched complacently and with seeming indifference. There was an almost total lack of interest shown by our delegation in all other demonstrations with the exception of a few active participants in the Chandler parade and several loud cheers for Johnson, Timmerman and Davis.

Called 'Confused Scramble'

My view of the Democratic National Convention was most often one of a tremendous and confused scramble of all of the delegations to find a candidate and platform under which the party might wage a unified campaign against the Republicans. This confusion was portrayed on a smaller scale by the Alabama delegation. It, like the convention, held a somewhat harmonious majority in the center but was besieged by the many divergent factions on the extremes.

The Alabama delegation, also like the entire convention, was able to reach the final point of unanimity after a definite majority was shown. Yet it, like the Democratic Party, still has many divergent factions held in tow only by the pressing need for a unified vote in the 1916 presidential elections.

TEEN GANGS MEET FOR TRUCE TALKS

14 Combatants Join Closed
Session With Mediator

By CLAYTON KNOWLES

Warring East Side gangs sought to resolve their differences last night in a mediation session with Peter M. Brown, a former Assistant United States Attorney.

The peace conference was accepted voluntarily by representatives of the embattled Enchanters and Dragons. Five nights earlier two boys had been shot down in an outbreak of violence.

The Sportsmen, allies of the Enchanters, took no direct part in the mediation, which officials hoped might bring peace in areas other than the lower East Side. The rival gangs have "brother" clubs in other parts of the city that were watching the outcome.

As the secret talks proceeded at 74 Trinity Place, four social workers, two clergymen and two other neighborhood representatives sat in to assist.

Mr. Brown was invited to participate by the representatives of the Lower East Side Neighborhoods Association and the Youth Board after their offer of mediation had been accepted by the gang leaders.

Now a trial lawyer with Cadwalader, Wickersham & Taft, Mr. Brown served from 1953 to 1955 as an assistant in the office of the United States Attorney for the Southern District of New York. Prior to that he had been assistant counsel to the New York Crime Commission and a special assistant state's attorney general.

Much of his experience as a prosecutor came in running down crime on the waterfront. Other negotiators were the

St. Andrew's Holds Dedication of New Library, Facilities

The Irene duPont Library and other additions to the facilities of St. Andrew's School, housed in a new wing of the main building at Noxontown, were formally dedicated yesterday in a ceremony which was a part of the 26th anniversary of the school.

The occasion was also the 36th anniversary of the consecration of the Rt. Rev. Philip Cook, as fourth bishop of Delaware. Bishop Cook was the first president of the Episcopal Church School Foundation.

Ceremonies were held to dedicate the Richard Chichester duPont Memorial Tower, the Irene duPont Library, a study hall, four classrooms, faculty apartments and double quarters for 56 students, as well as an enlarged and improved auditorium.

The ceremony began in the afternoon when a large number of guests gathered on the lawn of the Court of Cloisters. Addresses were given by the Rev. Walden Pell II, headmaster of the school; Alexis Felix duPont, Jr., who spoke for the donors; the Rev. J. Brooke Mosley, bishop of the Episcopal Diocese of Delaware, who represented the trustees; William Heyl Thompson, who spoke as a representative of the architects; Robert Wheelwright, for the landscape architects; Donald C. Turner, for the general contractors; Louis Mandes, for the sub-contractors, and John Marshall Cogswell, of the Class of 1957, senior praefect, who spoke for the students. At the opening exercise the Star Spangled Banner was played by the school orchestra.

A procession was formed in the Court of Cloisters, consisting of members of the clergy and trustees. The audience remained in the Court of Cloisters while the procession moved off and in turn visited each of the facilities in the new structure. As the procession halted at each point prayers were offered and were relayed back to those in the Court of Cloisters over a communications system, operated by students at each station. As the procession moved from one point to another they sang hymns.

Points at which the procession halted for prayer of dedication were: The Irene duPont Library; the Study Hall; The Granville Hudson Sherwood Room, to be devoted to the study of languages; The Richard Chichester duPont Memorial Tower; the corridor of the students rooms and the faculty apartments; the art studio and photographic darkroom; the Cloister Garth and the auditorium. At the close of the service there was a reception in the Cloister Garth and visitors to the service enjoyed an inspection of the new facilities.

Yesterday morning there was a service of holy communion and during this service there was a dedication of a paten and chalice given in memory of Richard Watkins Trapnell. Processional torches, the gift of William Cary, were blessed in the service as was a patismal shell, the gift of Peter Megaree. Portraits were dedicated of Richard Chichester and Arthur Raymond, the latter a bishop of Delaware and president of the foundation governing the school.

LIBRARY, TOWER TO BE DEDICATED

St. Andrew's School near Middletown will hold ceremonies for the dedication of the Irene duPont Library and other additions to the main building on Sunday.

The new wing has added about 50 per cent to the size of the building and includes a large study hall, four classrooms, two conference rooms, two faculty apartments, and double rooms for 56 boys. An enlarged and improved auditorium will shortly be ready for use.

Among those present for the ceremonies will be Mrs. Irene duPont, the donor, and the Rt. Rev. Arthur R. McKinstry, retired bishop of Delaware, who was chiefly responsible for the movement to build the new wing.

The Rev. Walden Pell II, headmaster, will be the celebrant at an 11 o'clock service of holy communion. At this service will be the blessing of a new set of white Eucharistic vestments and a paten and chalice given in memory of the Rev. Dr. Richard W. Trapnell, former rector of St.

Andrew's Church in Wilmington. His son, Richard W. Trapnell III, graduated from St. Andrew's in 1936 and is a member of the board of trustees.

Also to be blessed are processional torches, the gift of Maj. William C. Sibert, and a silver baptismal shell, the gift of Peter M. Brown.

Following an address by Dr. Pell the congregation will move to the dining hall for the dedication of two portraits: The first of Bishop McKinstry and the second of Richard Chichester duPont, son of the founder. The latter is a gift of his mother, Mrs. Dudley Clark.

The academic procession will form at 2:45. There will be remarks by Dr. Pell, for the school; John M. Cogswell, senior praefect, for the students; Louis Mandes, for the sub-contractors. Donald C. Turner will speak for the general contractor, William Heyl Thompson for the architects, and Robert Wheelwright for the landscape architects. There will be remarks by Alexis Felix duPont, Jr., on behalf of the donors and by the Rt. Rev. J. Brooke Mosley, Bishop of Delaware, for the trustees of the Episcopal Church School Foundation which operates St. Andrew's.

The bishops, clergy, and trustees will move in procession to the Irene duPont Memorial Library for prayers of dedication. Following this, the Granville H. Sherwood Room, to be devoted to the teaching of Modern languages, will be dedicated to the memory of Mr. Sherwood who was head of the modern language department from 1930 to 1945, served as senior master, and was a charter member of the faculty.

Next will come the blessing of the Richard Chichester duPont Memorial Tower, the gift of his mother and her children. The chimes in the tower were installed by Schulmerich Carillons. At the conclusion of the ceremonies refreshments will be served in the cloister garth, which is the gift of Mrs. Alexis Felix duPont, Sr., the widow of the founder.

This date, Oct. 14, marks the 26th anniversary of the school and the 36th anniversary of the consecration of the Rt. Rev. Philip Cook as the fourth Bishop of Delaware. Bishop Cook was the first president of the Episcopal Church School Foundation, Inc.

Books of The Times

By ORVILLE PRESCOTT

WHAT is happening to American civilization? Is it really changing for the worse as much as some professional viewers with alarm insist? If it is, are the changes only superficial and material—super-highways, split-level houses and color television—or are they basic to our society, genuine shifts in the nature of the American dream? One man who knows more about the state of the nation than most is William H. Whyte Jr., assistant managing editor of Fortune and author of "The Organization Man."

William H. Whyte Jr.

Mr. Whyte is a brilliantly gifted student of the customs of his country and an awesomely industrious investigator. For this work he read prodigious amounts of sociological literature and performed exhaustive feats of personal inquiry—by face-to-face interviews in schools, colleges, foundations, corporations and suburban housing developments and by questionnaires.

The result of his labors, I am convinced, is a truly important book. It is an interesting one, too, and a sadly discouraging one. Mr. Whyte may suffer a little from the sociologist's tendency to pile up excessive detail. He may take an unconscionable time to pass a given point. But his facts are fascinating and for the most part he presents them with agreeably modest authority.

'Belonging' as a Criterion

The thousands of facts and personal stories assembled here document a thesis. Most of them are drawn from research in large corporations and in the new suburbia; many from science, literature and elsewhere. And the thesis of "The Organization Man" is this: the old "Protestant Ethic" in which this nation grew great is rapidly being supplanted by a new "Social Ethic." By the "Protestant Ethic" Mr. Whyte means ideals of self-reliance, individual independence, thrift, ambition, etc. By "Social Ethic" he means "that contemporary body of thought which makes morally legitimate the pressures of society against the individual." He explains: "Its major propositions are three: a belief in the group as the source of creativity; a belief in 'belongingness' as the ultimate need of the individual, and a belief in the application of science to achieve the belongingness."

This new mythology has "a real moral imperative," Mr. Whyte believes, based on faith in the beneficence of organization life and the supreme good of identification with the social group. No longer is the brilliant individual achieving greatness in spite of the opposition of society a hero. Today the team player is the ideal. The bureaucrat is the true hero in the plans of college seniors and in the specifications of the personnel managers of industry.

The true organization man in industry, in science or in a foundation expects to work in groups, on committees and in a cozy gregarious security. A good job with adequate pay and proper pensions and retirement plans, a nice home in a community populated by people as nearly like himself as possible—these are the modest aspirations of the organization man and they, he is certain, depend on his ability to fit snugly into the groove, on his being liked by others, on his playing his fair and honorable role in the group without standing out from it in any conspicuous fashion. Neither wealth nor solid achievement in work, but "the management of other people's work, is the goal of the ambitious organization man."

Tentacles of 'Group Cult'

There is nothing morally wrong in such a view of life, but there is something dreadfully flat, unenterprising and passively acquiescent in it. That the cult of the group can be pleasant and comforting, Mr. Whyte makes clear; but that it can also be tyrannical, imposing a dreary conformity, is equally clear. And Mr. Whyte cites many circumstances that are strengthening the grip of the group cult on American life.

Perhaps his remarks on industry and higher education are as disquieting as any. The great corporations that recruit the most promising college seniors talk about the value of a liberal arts education and then rarely hire any but majors in business management and engineering. The emphasis is not even on basic science, but only on applied science. Behind this is the egregious notion that the facts of science are all known; it remains only to make use of them.

"The Organization Man" is a long book crammed with information and opinion. Some of this information, while highly interesting, is less closely related to Mr. Whyte's thesis than the rest. Thus he discusses at great length the transient way of life of young corporation organization men and their families in new housing developments, the loaded questions of so-called "personality tests" that are designed to weed out nonconformists, nonconventional, ruggedly individualistic applicants for jobs, and the compulsive hard work of corporation executives (material which appeared word for word in "The Executive Life" by the editors of Fortune).

But even the less directly connected material in "The Organization Man" contributes to its frightening picture of a complacent society in danger of petrifying in its satisfaction with the status quo. When adjustment to others and to the organization becomes the supreme virtue, Mr. Whyte asks, what will become of the individual soul and the health of the nation? Other than pious hopes for a renewed emphasis on our traditional belief in the individual's superiority to society, Mr. Whyte has no answer.

St. Andrew's Teacher Blames U.S. for Its Troubles in Greece

Returned Fulbright Fellow Says State Department And Information Service Fail to Answer Challenges, Get Story to People

By RAY DEVRIES

A Latin instructor recently returned to the United States after a year as a Fulbright Fellow in Greece, attributes much of our country's trouble in the Mid-East to actions of the State Department and the failure of the United States Information Service to function properly in that area.

Garrett C. Voorhees, who teaches Latin at St. Andrew's School near Middletown, returned here with his family recently after a year of teaching English at Athens College in Greece.

Yesterday Mr. Voorhees said the failure of the State Department to answer challenges issued by other governments in that area, combined with the failure of the U. S. Information Service to put the facts before both the Greek and the American people have caused much of the trouble.

Citing several examples, Mr. Voorhees said that many of the people are not aware that the U. S. Government has given them more than one billion dollars worth of aid since 1948. He said, "Certain segments of the population are aware of the aid, but the average man in the street is no better off."

Papers Critical

During his stay he noted that many of the Greek papers are extremely critical of the U. S. and sometimes unjustly. He said this country failed to answer many of the unjust charges that are placed against it.

"Perhaps the biggest sore spot," he continued, "is the fact that they feel they have been, and are being treated with more contempt than other countries such as Germany and Japan. Extra-territorial rights are still maintained by the U. S. in Greece, but they have been lifted in both Japan and Germany. This is especially wrong in their eyes since they were on our side during the war."

The extra-territorial right means that American soldiers and citizens living in other countries are not subject to the laws and courts of that country but only to military law. Thus in Greece, American soldiers cannot be punished by Greek courts for criminal offenses.

Another incident which irked the Greeks was the U. S. reaction to the Turkish riots. Mr. Voorhees said, "The people were hurt because the U. S., a Christian nation, expressed no sympathy whatever, when the organized riots were instigated by the Turks. They were hurt even more when Secretary of State John Foster Dulles complimented both the Greeks and Turks on staying out of war." He said, "The Greeks felt they were being put in the same class with the Turks."

Times Change

Mr. Voorhees compared his past year's experience with a short period of time he spent in Greece during 1950. He remembered being very decently treated in 1950. "In fact, people walked out of their way to show me how to get to my destination," he said.

"On my last visit," he noted, "I asked the same directions from the same section of town just as a trial. I received three wrong answers out of four tries. The fourth reply was abrupt and impersonal, but correct."

Spending a year teaching Greek students was quite an experience for the quiet-spoken Latin scholar. He commented, "The students were very smart. Some of them could write better compositions in English than our own students do." Toward the end of his stay, the students also showed the pressures of world tension. "Some of them thought the assignments I was giving them were for propaganda purposes."

He said the people over there have the usual misconceived notions about Americans. "They believe we are all millionaires, but they don't believe you when you tell them the cost of things over here." He noted that the people always see the comparison between American-Greek wage scales, but they never see the cost of living comparison.

"Their diet is just barely above the subsistence level," he continued. "They have just enough to keep them from getting tuberculosis."

St. Andrew's School Names Four Finalists

Students Among High Scorers In National Merit Scholarships

Four 6th formers at St. Andrew's School have been named finalists in the National Merit Scholarship competition, according to Headmaster Pell. The students are among the 7,500 highest scorers on a nationwide college aptitude examination given to 162,000 seniors in 12,503 high schools on October 24.

The St. Andrew's School finalists are William Hollins Clayton, Leslie Parke Fairfield, Thomas Nelson Rightmyer, and David William Zuckerman.

The finalists now face a stiff three-hour College Board examination Saturday, January 12, plus intensive screening of their leadership and extra-curricular records by a selection board.

At stake are more than 700 four-year scholarships, many of them sponsored by business and industrial corporations. Included are 100 Sears-Roebuck Foundation Merit Scholarships and nationwide programs sponsored by such companies and foundations as Pittsburg Plate Glass, F. W. Woolworth, Standard Oil (Indiana), International Nickel, and many others.

The January 12 examination will be given in designated testing centers throughout the country, and at least 7,000 of the Merit Finalists are expected to survive this hurdle, according to John M. Stalnaker, President of the National Merit Scholarship Corporation.

The competition is open to any public, private, or parochial high school in the United States, Alaska, Hawaii, and Puerto Rico; and any high school senior may participate. Today's 7,500 finalists represent one half of one per cent of 1957's high school graduating classes—the best in each state.

St. Andrew's School Tops In State Mat Contest

8 First Places Won By Local Squad; Wm. Penn School Is Runner-Up

All-state honors in the first annual Delaware Interscholastic wrestling tournament held Saturday in the University of Delaware's Carpenter Field House were captured by the St. Andrew's School squad near this town.

St. Andrews, coached by Bill Cameron, dominated the meet, scoring heavily in the final round. The Middletown squad copped eight first place medals out of the 12 weight classes, and four second and third places to top the five team entries in the tournament. St. Andrew's 133-pounder, Michael Quillin, was awarded the outstanding wrestler trophy.

Second place in team standings was taken by William Penn of New Castle with 76 points, third place went to Milford with 53, and Tower Hill was a close fourth with 51. The Delmar squad scored 10 points. Brown Vocational and Mt. Pleasant were both represented by one individual entry. The 145-pounder from Brown, Francis Duszak, took nine points while advancing to the final round.

Quillin earned the outstanding wrestler award by scoring pins in both the semi-final and final rounds, flattening Milford's Ray Marvel in 0:43 and Dave Hosier of William Penn in 5:25. Teammates Earling Speer, Jim Terry, John Witwer, Anthony Jeffcott, Guthrie Fishburne and Captain John Cogswell also scored consecutive pins in the semi-final and final rounds.

William Penn was led to second place position by 145-pounder Darrel Cole, who pinned Duszak in the final at 3:20, and 95-pounder Harvey Meadows, who defeated St. Andrew's Buck Brinton, 5-0, in the final.

Heavyweight Chester Dickerson scored third place Milford's only win in an over-time period against Bill Giverson of William Penn. Tower Hill's only first was taken by 103-pounder Chris Pechin, who completed an undefeated season with a decision over Jim Patterson of William Penn in the final. Pechin was the only wrestler in the tournament with a perfect season.

Major L. Johnson Weds Miss Demas In Novel Ceremony

BABENHAUSEN — It has long been a military tradition for bridal couples to pass under an arch of crossed sabres on leaving the church. However, at a recent wedding here the custom was augmented to gigantic proportions.

In what is believed to be the first ceremony of its kind, Maj Lawrence Johnson, Jr., Exec Officer of the 531st FAM Bn, and his bride, the former Esther Demas, rode on a colorfully decorated vehicle through an Olympian arch of crossed "Corporal" Guided Missiles belonging to the battalion.

After their union in the 36th FA Gp Chapel, the couple boarded a modern caisson and led a caravan of sedans through the huge arch to the 36th Gp Officers' Club for the reception. The wedding guests included both the families of the bride and groom who flew in for the occasion from the States. Following the reception, the newlyweds left for Austria by car (not missile) in the only conventional note of the day.

The bride was formerly secretary for the well known syndicated Washington columnist, Drew Pearson.

PASSING UNDER THEIR BRIDAL ARCH of 'Corporal' Guided Missiles are Maj Lawrence Johnson, Jr., Exec of the 531st FAM Bn, and his bride the former Esther Demas. The couple rode under the missiles after they had passed under the traditional arch of crossed sabres.

Philadelphians at Home

The Hemphills Don't Budget Their Life

EVERYONE'S HERE BUT BABY, in the kitchen of City Controller and Mrs. Alexander Hemphill of Chestnut Hill. Two-year-old Sander still uses a high chair, drinks his milk like a good boy under watchful eye of his brown-haired young mother. Pouring coffee is Elizabeth, 7; at the stove Anne Price, 10; with Rebecca, 3, listening to dad while Jean, 6, serves his coffee. Not yet ready to take her place at the table is baby Christina, just three weeks old.

Photos by Tony Montone

LIKE FATHER, LIKE SON: Beneath a portrait of the late John Hemphill, candidate for governor in 1930, his son Alexander Hemphill and wife, Jean, look over street lists in preparation for spring primary elections. Philadelphia's City Controller and family are "fast filling up" the 24-room house which they bought five years ago.

By JOAN WOOLLCOTT

A BRAND-NEW eventual listener to tales of family history and high politics recently took up residence in a certain Chestnut Hill home. She is three-week-old Christina Hemphill, sixth child and fifth daughter of Philadelphia's youthful city controller, Alexander Hemphill, and Mrs. Hemphill.

Baby Christina hasn't yet heard, for example, about the time that Daniel Webster came to a Philadelphia dinner, where his host tried to lure him into a declaration for Andrew Jackson. The host, as everyone in the family except Christina and her two-year-old brother, Alexander, Jr., knows, was their great-great-great-great uncle, Joseph Hemphill, congressman and judge of that day.

"And then what, Daddy? Then what? What happened to Daniel Webster?"

That was 10-year-old Anne Price or "Pricie's" question. But Elizabeth, seven, could have asked it; or Jean, six; or possibly even Rebecca, three.

"And then," recounted the City Controller, tapping out his pipe ashes on the hearth, "Daniel Webster pretended he'd had too much wine, and he wandered out through a big French window at Strawberry Mansion and sat out on a cliff overlooking the river till it was time to go home. That's the end of the story."

"And Daniel Webster never spoke except to say that the strawberries were good," added Mrs. Hemphill, the amazingly girlish-looking mother of six.

ALEXANDER HEMPHILL, like Joseph, broke with family tradition by leaving West Chester for Philadelphia. Joseph sought political fortune in the big city and wound up owning the stately home, now part of Fairmount Park, known today as Strawberry Mansion.

Though his great-great-great nephew doesn't live in a mansion, he and his family do occupy a 24-room greystone house on E. Evergreen av. which they bought five years ago and which suits their needs to perfection.

Built in 1904 on traditional lines, with spacious center hall and decorative doorway, the contemporary Hemphill residence provides more than enough rooms for family living—"although they're fast filling up," Hemphill noted. An attorney, he has a professional office in a wing at the rear; and there are also large, formal

PARIS AT NIGHT 1957

The clean-sweep broom hangs proudly on the pole
For baseball, crew and tennis won the day
And fifty-nine potential housewives stole
One hundred fifty gallant hearts away!

Supper in the Cloister never was so good,
And "vin du pays" flowed from lordly cask.
For Foley's folk to excel Parisian food
Is after all their usual daily task!

Mais vive la France et vive la Republique!
Quels décorations! La Tour Eiffel,
Le skyline de Montmartre, sont magnifiques,
Ce skyline que nous connaissons so well.

And Lester Lanin's band, ah, quel orchestre!
Zut! Flut! Zoot-suit, and hats galore!
Red-hot trumpets, a band that's one of the best,
Sophisticates who really know the score!

And now comes midnight, time when winsome ghosts
With weary escorts steal across the lawn,
Are tucked in bed by hostesses and hosts
And slumber sweetly far into the morn.

Now Fathers Leech and Hawkins are about,
To minister the Sacrament and preach
To pious students and their dates devout
And many a kindly, footsore, dozing teach.

Hail to the peerless Class of '58,
Advisor Hillier, punch-boys and the rest
Who made this dance one of the truly great,
A terpsichorean Mount Everest!

And hail to you, blithe spirits, winsome lasses,
Whose charms and virtues cannot be described!
We'll miss you when we all return to classes
And other tasks by Faculty prescribed.

So farewell, ladies, with our admiration
And blessing; and, in case you did not know it,
This humble effort is the termination

Rev. Dr. Walden Pell II Will Be Temporarily Succeeded by William Herron Cameron, Jr.; Has Held Post Since School Opened

The Rev. Dr. Walden Pell II, headmaster of St. Andrew's School since its founding in 1930, has resigned, effective June 28.

William Herron Cameron, Jr., now assistant headmaster, will become acting headmaster at that time and serve until a permanent headmaster can be obtained.

Announcement of the administrative change at the Middletown school was made today by the Rt. Rev. J. Brooke Mosley, bishop of the Diocese of Delaware and president of the board of trustees of the Episcopal Church School Foundation, directors of the institution.

Dr. Pell's resignation, because of reasons of health, has been pending for almost a year. After June 28, he and Mrs. Pell will live at their summer home on Perch Creek, near Elkton, Md. Dr. Pell plans to write, travel, and study before taking up regular work again in the field of educational ministry.

Dr. Pell was born at Quogue, N. Y., on July 3, 1902, the son of Francis Livingston Pell, a New York architect, and Ellen Van Buren Morris Pell. He was educated at the Allen-Stevenson School, New York City, St. Mark's School, Princeton University, and Christ Church, Oxford. He was a Rhodes Scholar at Oxford and received his bachelor of arts degree there in 1926 and his master's in 1930. He also holds an honorary doctorate of sacred theology from the University of Pennsylvania.

He is married to the former Edith Minturn Bonsal, a native of Lenox, Mass. They have three children, Melissa, Stuyvesant Bonsal, and Mary Leigh, all of whom grew up on the St. Andrew's campus.

Dr. Pell taught at Lenox School in Massachusetts from 1926 to 1930. He was ordained a deacon in the Episcopal Church in 1927, a priest in 1928, and came to St. Andrew's as its first headmaster on Aug. 19, 1930.

He is a member and former vice president of the Headmasters' Association, a member and former president of the Boarding School Association of the Philadelphia region, a member of the National Association of Secondary School Principals, the Board of Examining Chaplains and president of the standing committee of the Episcopal Diocese of Delaware.

He had been a member of the Executive Council, and chairman of the departments of Christian education and Christian social relations in the diocese. He has twice been priest-in-charge at St. Anne's Church, Middletown, during vacant periods in the rectorship.

Other Memberships

He was formerly chairman of the Commission on Secondary School Work of the National Council of the Episcopal Church, and is now a trustee of the Council for Religion in Independent Schools, formerly a trustee of the Allen-Stevenson School, an alumni trustee of St. Mark's School, a member of the advisory board of Montgomery Country Day School, and the National Advisory Committee of the Student YMCA.

Dr. Pell is a member of the Newark Country Club, the Colonial Lords of Manors, Newcomen Society, Anglican Society, Cum Laude Society, Ivy Club of Princeton, Princeton Club of New York, Quogue Field and Beach Club, National Association of Amateur Oarsmen, Schoolboy Rowing Association, the National and Massachusetts Audubon Societies, Eastern Bird Banding Association, and an associate member of the American Ornithological Union.

During World War II he was a company commander in the Delaware State Guard and later inspector general with the rank of major. He is co-author with Powell Dawley of "The Religion of the Prayer Book," and of various articles and pamphlets on education, religious and ornithological topics.

Native Of Pittsburgh

Mr. Cameron was born Nov. 7, 1906, in Pittsburgh, the son of Dr. William H. and Susan Tiers Cameron. He is a great-great-grandson of Nicholas Van Dyke III, governor of Delaware from 1783 to 1786.

Mr. Cameron attended the public schools of Pittsburgh and the Episcopal High School of Virginia. He received his bachelor of arts degree from Pennsylvania State University in 1929 and his masters from Columbia University in 1939. He is a member of Beta Theta Pi fraternity.

In 1934 he married Marianne Chase of New Bedford, Mass., and they have one son, William H. Cameron III, now serving in the Marine Corps.

Mr. Cameron began his teaching experience at the Episcopal High School of Virginia in 1929, and came to St. Andrew's to teach English and coach wrestling in January, 1931. He is the only remaining member of the faculty who was at the Middletown school during the first session.

Mr. Cameron became chairman of the English department in 1934, senior master in 1945, and assistant headmaster last year.

An avid wrestling fan, Mr. Cameron recently said that his greatest honor was being coach of the St. Andrew's School wrestling team which this winter won the University of Delaware High School Tournament, and in so doing it took eight first places, one second, and three thirds.

NAVY EIGHT FIRST ON CARNEGIE LAKE

Midshipman Varsity Defeats Princeton by Foot for Three-Race Sweep

By ALLISON DANZIG
Special to The New York Times.
PRINCETON, N. J., April 20 —By a tenth of a second, one foot, Navy's varsity crew nipped Princeton at the very finish of their mile and three quarter race on Carnegie Lake today.

In as close and exciting a race throughout as has been seen here in recent years, Rusty Callow's big midshipman eight came on to complete a sweep of the three events of the regatta.

It was the opening of the season for both crews.

Navy's time was 8:45, less than four seconds over the Carnegie Lake record for the distance, made by Cornell in 1955.

Princeton seemed to have victory in its grasp until the mid-dies cut down the Tiger lead with each stroke in the last hundred yards. The Nassau eight was clocked in 8:45.1.

Flat water prevailed during the race and there was a slight tailwind helping the crews.

The finish was so close that the crowd waited tensely for the announcement from the referee's boat.

When Clifford (Tip) Goes called through his megaphone that Navy was the winner, a silence fell upon the gathering at the finish line.

It was a bitter disappointment to most of the 3,000 after the marvelous fight Princeton had made in a race in which the lead fluctuated by a margin of a few feet, over and over.

Same Margin in Two Races

Navy won the junior varsity, and freshman races also, coming margin each time was a crowd on and a quarter. The cheered it jayvee was weakened. The cheered it of two oarsmen b and gold-tipped during the water thrash the water.

Navy's d Princeton was unable the leave any further progress. it all crews went across at 38, with Navy almost a length and a quarter in front.

WALTER J. LAIRD, 63, WILMINGTON BANKER

Special to The New York Times.

WILMINGTON, Del., June 4.—Walter Jones Laird, a director and chairman of the trust committee of the Wilmington Trust Company, died last night at his home. His age was 63.

Mr. Laird, who retired in 1953 as head of the bank's trust department, had undergone surgery recently at Johns Hopkins Hospital, Baltimore. He had been treasurer of the trustees of the Protestant Episcopal Diocese of Delaware since 1935, administering endowed funds and trusts.

From 1909 to 1920 he worked in the engineering department of the E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co. in construction of plants in Colorado, Utah, Washington, Virginia, Tennessee and New Jersey. During World War I he specialized in construction of smokeless powder plants.

After resigning from du Pont, he spent four years in investment banking and brokerage work with Laird, Bissell & Meeds here and in New York.

Since 1944, Mr. Laird had served on the Wilmington Board of Park Commissioners and had been vice president and trustee of St. Andrew's School, Middletown. He was treasurer of the Delaware chapter of the Robert E. Lee Memorial Foundation.

Surviving are his widow, the former Rebecca Ann Sedberry, Nashville, Tenn., and two sons, Walter J. Jr. and Richard Lee Laird.

Dr. Pell Made Honorary Member of Rotary Club

Praised For Participation In Civic Affairs And Church; Scroll Given

Dr. Walden Pell, III, Headmaster of St. Andrew's School was inducted into the Rotary Club of Middletown as an honorary member on Wednesday, May 29th. Honorary membership in Rotary is granted to men who have attained success in their vocation and who have contributed unselfishly to community betterment.

Prior to the induction, several members attested to Dr. Pell's activities in various fields, particularly in this area. Past Pres. G. J. McNaughton described Dr. Pell's participation in local affairs. During World War 2 he was commanding officer of Co. D of the State Guard. He also set up the plane spotting post atop the school and with Mrs. Pell took their turn in spotting duty. He was always ready and willing to cheerfully respond when he could be of service in any community affair. The grounds of the school have been made available for picnics and other community activities.

Past President, Harlan M. Fisher spoke of Dr. Pell as a Churchman. His assistance at St. Anne's Church was invaluable, especially during times when it was without a rector. His interest and support of Parish affairs gave great impetus to the development during the past quarter century. The high position he holds in religious circles, both in the Diocese and in the National Church is evidence of his brilliant success as a clergyman and headmaster.

Dr. Walter H. Lee spoke of Dr. Pell as a man and in glowing terms pictured him as a person of sterling character with a tremendous capacity for getting things done. Many personal traits, not generally known, were called to the attention of the club. Often he forced himself to a greater scope of service at a sacrifice of his vast store of energy.

Actual induction as an Honorary Member was performed by Past President W. Charles Money who summed up Dr. Pell's qualifications entitling him to membership. Mr. Money's remarks were well chosen and effectively delivered. He concluded them with the presentation of a Rotary pin, Rotary's booklet "Adventures in Service" and an appropriate scroll, copy of which follows:

ROTARY CLUB of Middletown, Delaware

Whereas Walden Pell 2nd has distinguished himself by meritorious service in the furtherance of Rotary ideals as an educator of renown, as an administrator of proven ability, as a lover of the outdoors and an ardent conservationist, as a devotee of athletics and good sportsmanship, as an ordained minister who personifies true Christian ideals, and as a beloved member of our community, We the acting officers, with the full consent of the members of the Rotary Club of Middletown, do elect him to HONORARY MEMBERSHIP upon this twenty-ninth day of May 1957, wherefore he shall be entitled to attend all meetings and enjoy many other privileges of this club.

L. Edward Ennis

President

Irvin S. Taylor

V.-P. & Sec.

Norman M. Thornton

Treasurer

In accepting the scroll and membership, Dr. Pell said he was overwhelmed and deeply grateful for the honor. He said he had always been an admirer of Rotary and looked forward to active participation with the Middletown Club. The events leading up to the establishment of St. Andrew's School and the choice of this particular spot were related by the speaker who then recounted many incidents that happened since 1930. Of great interest were the accounts involving individuals in the neighborhood, a great number of which have passed on, and their bearing on the School's development. Dr. Pell said he anticipated the opportunity of spending more time with his friends here and continuing his writing of the 27 years he was privileged to be Headmaster of St. Andrew's School.

Guests at the meeting were Messrs Cameron, Schmolze, Voorhees, Foley and Baum from the staff of St. Andrew's, Mr. William Comegys, an alumnus of the school and Rev. Joseph Koci, Jr., Rector of St. Anne's Church. President L. E. Ennis presided over the meeting which was arranged by Dr. Lee, chairman, assisted by Norman Thornton and Harlan Fisher.

The commencement exercises on Saturday will conclude with the awarding of prizes and the benediction given by the Rt. Rev. J. Brooke Mosley, Bishop of Delaware.

DR. PELL

As all of you are aware, Dr. Pell will resign as Headmaster of St. Andrews School at the end of June this year. He will have concluded many years of service to the Church, the School and the Community.

It is not the purpose at this time to write any lengthy biography or accolades of the work that Dr. Pell has done for God in so many ways. These many activities are known by all. Instead, we wish to offer our prayers that God will continue him in Grace, Peace, Prosperity and Health, and will continue to use him as a faithful soldier and servant until his life's end.

ST. ANDREW'S SCHOOL ALUMNI ASSOCIATION

VOL. III

The alumni's greatest contribution to the success of the 25th Anniversary Celebration was undoubtedly the presence on the campus during some part or other of the week end celebration of 101 alumni and 34 alumni wives. This is not, of course, intended to minimize the generosity of the alumni who gave a total of almost $1000 as special gifts for the occasion. Notable among these gifts were contributions from Germany and South Africa, the gifts of Ulrich Birkholz '39 and Heinz Sander '40. Ulrich earmarked his contribution for the War Memorial Fund and asked to be remembered at the Alumni Banquet to those masters and alumni whom he knew. But important as were all the gifts as evidence of the generosity and concern of many alumni, the fact remains that the actual presence of so many St. Andrews did what nothing else could to assure the School that it has been doing the right thing by and large for the past 25 years.

One of the most satisfactory aspects of the Anniversary Week End from the alumni point of view was the opportunity it afforded to express publicly the affection and gratitude felt toward the Pells by the people who have attended SAS. During the course of his remarks at the convocation Billi Clarke '39 presented to Dr. and Mrs. Pell a Steuben bowl, on which is engraved the School seal, the Pells' initials and the dates 1930-1955. At the alumni banquet Tom Bright announced that the alumni were presenting to Mrs. Pell a buffet table to be used by the Pells at their new house, "Perfect End", on the Elk River. The NEWS LETTER is happy to print the following letter from the Pells:

Dear Chester:

We would like to thank each alumnus personally for the magnificent Steuben bowl the alumni gave us on the School's 25th Anniversary and the unique buffet table to be used at our new house on the Elk River, but we find to reach everyone individually is practically impossible.

We are therefore writing you, as Secretary of the Alumni Association, with the thought that you might include this message of heartfelt thanks in the Alumni NEWS LETTER, and so reach a greater number than we could by our own efforts.

We are completely overwhelmed by these marvelous gifts and by the thought that goes with them, and thank all who had a part in them from the bottom of our hearts.

Affectionately,

Walden and Edith Pell

Appropriately enough the enrollment for the 25th anniversary year is the largest in the School's history. The day before school opened 150 boys were signed up. At the last minute one new boy dropped out (naturally the word is now that he was a combination of Bronco Nagurski and Howard Cassidy), leaving us with 149 and a meaningless name on the school list.

The only unhappy note during the anniversary celebration was Wilmington Friends 20-13 victory over the SAS varsity. St. Andrew's over-anxiety seemed to have as much to do with the defeat as did any other single factor. Friends had a very speedy back who would retreat to pass, draw the SAS linemen into a single small area, and then race around end for substantial yardage before the secondary could get out of their pass defending positions and come up to make the tackle. During the course of this whole unpleasant operation enough SAS tackles were missed to make all too appropriate the usual spectator comment, "Why don't they teach 'em to block any more?"

Unfortunately the Friends game was fairly representative of the way the football season has been going. We lost our opener 14-12 to a very good St. Paul's team, which had beaten Gilman the week before. We managed a somewhat lackluster 13-6 over Sanford on a muddy field, and the week after the Friends game we lost the Pink Elephant at Landon by losing 33-13 to a team that hasn't been beaten since SAS itself turned the trick in 1952. As this NEWS LETTER heads for the mimeograph machine the Cardinals are getting ready to take on Tower Hill. A win today would make up for a lot inasmuch as the boys in green humbled a better than average SAS team last year in front of a Fathers' Week End crowd.

We lost - 38 to 6.

This year's remaining schedule:

2:00 5 Nov. St. Alban's at SAS
3:00 11 Nov. Baltimore Friends at Balto
2:15 19 Nov. St. James' at SAS

The Class Notes contain news of Bill Hinant '53's role in the new Broadway hit, No Time for Sergeants. It remains for this part of the publication to report that Bill's performance has been witnessed by Dr. Pell, who stood throughout the whole play and who reports that Bill has apparently jumped from SAS's subterranean productions to Broadway without losing a bit of the competence for which he will be long remembered here.

The next NEWS LETTER will be accompanied by the annual statement of dues' being due and payable. This year we got off to a flying start when Powell Pierpoint '40 circulated among the crowd collecting $250. It is reported that he collected from three members of the Vassar Alumnae Association.

Incorporated

Wilmington, Delaware

April 15, 1957

To the Alumni, Parents of students and other friends of St. Andrew's School:

It was with extreme reluctance that the Trustees of The Episcopal Church School Foundation have felt compelled to accept the resignation of Rev. Walden Pell II as Headmaster of St. Andrew's School, effective as of June 28, 1957. The resignation was prompted by considerations of health and in order to conserve his energies to write, to travel and to continue his active interest in educational ministry.

Dr. Pell has been Headmaster of St. Andrew's School since its foundation and the resignation was accepted with a lively understanding of all that he has meant to the school during its entire history, and with grateful hearts for his effective administration and the lasting impact he has made on the lives and characters of those who studied there.

Dr. Pell was born at Quogue, N. Y., July 3, 1902, the son of Francis Livingston Pell and Ellen Van Buren Morris Pell. He was educated at St. Mark's, Princeton and Christ Church, Oxford, from the latter of which he received his Bachelor degree in 1926, and his Master's degree in 1930. He holds the degree of STD from the University of Pennsylvania. Dr. Pell married Edith Minturn Bonsal, and their three children grew up on St. Andrew's campus. Dr. and Mrs. Pell will make their home at "Perfect End" on Perch Creek, near Elkton, Maryland.

Upon the retirement of Dr. Pell he will be succeeded as Acting Headmaster by Mr. William Herron Cameron, the present Assistant Headmaster, and until a permanent Headmaster is installed. Mr. Cameron has been at St. Andrew's since its foundation, and is deeply imbued with its aims and traditions. He was born in Pittsburgh November 7, 1906, the son of Dr. William H. and Susan Tiers Cameron, and is a great-great grandson of Nicholas Van Dyke III, Governor of Delaware from 1783 to 1786.

Mr. Cameron attended Episcopal High School of Virginia and received his bachelor's degree from Pennsylvania State College

SALEM, Mass., Sept. 13—Grace Protestant Episcopal Church was the setting here this afternoon for the marriage of Miss Elizabeth Haskell to George Graham Vest 4th.

The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Donald Allen, rector of the Church. A reception was held at the home here of Mr. and Mrs. John Pickering, uncle and aunt of the bride.

Mr. and Mr. Paul Thomson Haskell of Salem are the bride's parents. Mr. Vest is son of Capt. John P. W. Vest, U. S. N., retired, and Mrs. Vest of Fairfield, Conn.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore a gown of white satin and heirloom lace. Miss Stella Moore was maid of honor. The bridesmaids were the Misses Ellen Chapman, Joan Grafmueller, Anne McGrath, Anne C. Mitchell and Jane K. Pinckney. Capt. Wendell Neville Vest, U. S. M. C., was his brother's best man.

Minturn T. Wright, Jr., of Chestnut Hill, and Mrs. Louis M. Washburn, of Mt. Airy. Also three brothers.

Headmaster Moss assumed his new post at St. Andrew's after being associated with Groton for 20 years. Mrs. Moss is the former Huldah Bradley, daughter of Mrs. Newell C. Bradley, of Rittenhouse Square, and the late Mr. Bradley.

At the reception, not only did we see the Mosses, we also met Dr. Walden Pell, 2d. Dr. Pell was headmaster at St. Andrew's from the time it was founded in 1930 until his retirement last year. While here for the St. Andrew's reception, the Walden Pells visited their brother and sister-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Francis L. Pell, Plymouth Meeting.

Walden Pell, by the way, is preparing to embark on an interesting new assignment. He is going to Viet Nam, where he'll administer to Anglican church people—English, American and Chinese. It's possible that he'll set up a school in Viet Nam similar to St. Andrew's.

Current president of St. Andrew's Alumni Association is Alexander Hemphill, controller of Philadelphia. He introduced us to the A. Felix duPonts, who drove up from Wilmington for the reception. St. Andrew's School was founded in 1930 by Mr. duPont's father, the late Alexis Felix duPont, with the support of Mrs. Irene duPont, the Rt. Rev. Philip Cook and financier Allan J. Henry.

Wilmington, Delaware

February 14, 1958

To the Faculty, Alumni, Friends and Parents of the Students of St. Andrew's School:

Many of you have already been sent a formal notice of the election of a Headmaster of St. Andrew's School. However, we are happy at this time to enlarge somewhat upon that announcement and also to write now to some others of you who are friends of the School and who may not have received the first formal card.

When Dr. Pell resigned as Headmaster, the Trustees began an intensive search for a young man as a successor who would hold the School to the high standards set by the leadership of Dr. Pell and Mr. Cameron.

This interesting task of seeking a Headmaster continued steadily for eighteen months and ended happily by the election of Mr. Robert A Moss and his subsequent acceptance of our invitation.

Mr. Moss is a 42-year-old graduate of Princeton and for twenty years has been at Groton School, recently as Assistant to the Headmaster. He comes to us with highest recommendations as a scholar, as an administrator, and as a sound Christian churchman with a contagious enthusiasm for all the Church is and stands for. We are confident that you will give him your complete loyalty and know you will quickly come to have the same full confidence in him that we have.

We also wish, at this time, to express our sincere and keen appreciation for the life and work of Mr. William H. Cameron. As Assistant Headmaster, Mr. Cameron, on Dr. Pell's resignation, was made Acting Headmaster and his markedly strong leadership in this capacity has been a decisive factor in holding our standards and morale high. We are entirely grateful to him for these strengths in recent months and for his continual willingness to serve St. Andrew's School faithfully at all times. He also needs and deserves - and he certainly has - our lasting loyalty and confidence as he continues this good work.

TARLETON HONORED AS S.J. CITIZEN OF YEAR

Top News Guild Award to Baltimore Man

Richard E. Davis, a Baltimore newspaperman, last night won the Wilbur E. Bade Award, the highest honor the American Newspaper Guild can give a member for work in labor relations.

Announcement of the award was made at the Guild's Banquet in the Hotel Sainte Claire.

The union, made up of newspaper reporters, advertising men and office workers, is holding its national convention here this week.

Three other awards were made last night by the Guild's San Jose unit.

G. Eber Tarleton, Santa Clara County's registrar of voters, was named the San Jose Guild's Distinguished Citizen of 1958.

Ben Phillips, San Jose Guild president, said the award was made for Tarleton's "outstanding community service and cooperation with the working press."

Jack Calhoun, a staff writer for the San Jose Mercury, received the $50 Jack Wright Memorial Award for outstanding writing on a humanitarian issue.

Calhoun was cited for reporting the work of the Diamantes, a Mexican-American volunteer youth help group.

A $100 Guild Scholarship was awarded W. C. Dannenbrink, an Air Force veteran and journalism student at San Jose State College.

The $500 award to Davis, a copy reader for a Baltimore paper, was made in recognition of his work in "revitalizing" the Baltimore Guild.

The banquet was highlight of yesterday's convention activities.

Earlier, delegates were told at a forum that many California employers are opposed to Prop. 18, the so called right to work measure, which will appear on the November ballot.

The message came from John Henning, educational director of the California State Federation of Labor, and Paul St. Sure, an attorney for the Pacific Maritime Association of San Francisco.

"The steam behind the right to work proposal comes chiefly from employer groups in Southern California," St.

Sure said. "Up here, a lot of employers don't care for it."

"Their opposition will be silent, for business reasons. But many of them will do nothing to help Prop. 18."

His message was echoed by Henning, who said the issue has divided the Republican party in the State sharply.

St. Sure, who represents shipping firms in their negotiations with unions, said his personal stand against Prop. 18 had caused surprise in business circles.

He predicted that passage of the law would give California ten times as much labor trouble as it has now.

Henning said the State Federation of Labor is now convinced many of the State's top management figures will not exert themselves in Prop. 18's behalf.

He said this has shored up labor's hope of defeating the measure in November.

Today's delegates will start transacting Convention business at an afternoon meeting in the Ste. Claire Hotel.

Yesterday was devoted chiefly to committee work.

Among the resolutions slated for presentation today and tomorrow is one attacking Prop. 18.

Another will urge President Eisenhower to sign a bill restricting the right of Federal agencies to deny the general public access to their records and documents.

The Bill has passed the House and Senate and awaits the President's signature.

U.S. Alerted Tanks to Free Berlin Convoy

Of GIs Halted Dash
Into Red Germany

By CHARLES W. RIDLEY,
United Press International.

BERLIN, Dec. 6.—Informed sources disclosed today the U.S. Army alerted a force of tanks and infantrymen last month to go to the rescue of a military truck convoy detained at a checkpoint outside West Berlin by Soviet border guards.

The Russians released the three trucks and their soldier-drivers and the task force was not dispatched.

The alert was said to emphasize the U.S. determination to uphold its occupation rights in isolated West Berlin and protect the lifelines linking it to the West.

Search Demanded.

According to the sources, the combat-ready force was told to stand by for action when armed Soviet guards held up the convoy Nov. 14 at the Babelsberg checkpoint on the 110-mile highway to West Germany.

The Russians refused to permit the convoy to proceed to West Germany unless the drivers submitted to a search of the trucks. The drivers refused.

The sources said Maj. Gen.
Barksdale Hamlett, American commandant in Berlin, ordered a task force formed to push from West Berlin through one mile of East German territory to the checkpoint to free the soldiers if necessary.

Parley Succeeds.

But first the Americans sent Findlay Burns, American mission political adviser, to Soviet headquarters in the East Berlin district of Karlshorst to demand the convoy's release.

Mr. Burns' mission succeeded and the convoy was released after nearly nine hours

U. of D. Student Among 4 Who Glimpsed Cuban War

SALISBURY, Md., Jan. 12.—Four college boys from nearby Ocean City are back at school now, regaling classmates with their first hand observations of the Cuban revolt.

The four, Michael Quillen, Tom Spencer, Lannie Gilbert and Joseph Ayres, were spending a Christmas holiday in Key West, Fla.

They decided to go on to Cuba for a close look at the situation. They flew to Havana on Dec. 29.

But when they got there, they found stores closed and food hard to obtain. In fact, the four got hungry. After one night in Havana, they tried to leave but airport guards wouldn't let them near the planes. Most Americans had left.

With shooting and shouting going on around them, they grew hungrier.

Quillen tried to get something to eat at a closed roadside stand. But a Cuban rebel who spoke no English arrested him. But finally, Quillen and his friends were able to talk their way out of the predicament.

A Cuban woman fed them fried beans and bananas.

"It tasted pretty good about that time," Quillen said.

The collegians teamed up with two other Americans and chartered a plane back to the states. All have now returned to college; Quillen at the University of Delaware, Spencer at McDonough School, Ayres at William and Mary, and Gilbert at the University of Baltimore.

Greenville Couple Sponsoring Smithsonian Institution Project to Caribbean; U. of D., St. Andrew's Staffers to Make Trip

Remote islands in the Caribbean's Lesser Antilles will be the target of a scientific expedition just getting under way in which three Delawareans have a prominent part.

J. Bruce Bredin, Greenville, honorary fellow of the Smithsonian Institution; Dr. Richard F. Darsie, Jr., associate professor of entomology in the University of Delaware School of Agriculture, and William H. Jesse Nalle to work with Redevelopment authority and City Planning commission.
Annual salary set at $8,400.

—The Gazette and Daily

Jesse Nalle, Philadelphia planning consultant, yesterday was approved by York Redevelopment authority for the new post of authority planning director.

His $8,400-a-year salary will be divided equally between the authority and City Planning commission which Jan. 14 approved his appointment as planning director subject to the authority's approval.

The last step in finalizing Nalle's appointment is city council confirmation and he is scheduled to meet council in its weekly caucus today.

City planners and the authority last September agreed to pool technical staffs. Later, when both groups had difficulty in finding perspective planning directors to work with the joint staff, it was decided to share services of a single director.

As city planning director, Nalle succeeded Richard H. Young who left in July to take a better paying job in Syracuse. Young received $6,100 here and city council had set up the same amount in this year's budget. The city share of the planner's salary will now be $4,200.

As planner for the authority, his primary task will be co-ordination of citizen-consultant activities on the Center City study. There are now plans to set up various committees of York Redevelopment council to assist on specific phases of the study.

Definition of the division of Nalle's duties will be drawn up by authority chairman Henry B.
Leader and Planning commission chairman Harper L. Kohler.

ST. ANDREW'S SCHOOL ALUMNI ASSOCIATION

Middletown, Delaware

VOL. IV

NEWS LETTER

No. 6

This year's alumni reunion, Dr. Pell's last as Headmaster, was appropriately enough the best of the 22 reunions in the history of the Alumni Association. This is, of course, a sweeping statement that, as every 6th Form student of argumentation knows, requires immediate substantiation. In the first place, more alumni returned than have showed up for any occasion save the 25th Anniversary - '55 and 23 wives. Stan and Marie Felver '35, came all the way from Kent State University in Ohio, and no less than 17 members of the SAS Club of New York turned up. The athletic teams did themselves proud. The baseball team clinched a tie for first place in the IAC by walloping Sanford on Richardson Field, 12-1. The tennis team busied itself at Wilmington winning the Delaware Interscholastic Tournament; and the crew was occupied in the finals of the National Schoolboy Regatta on the Potomac (they didn't win, but placing two fours in the finals is in itself an achievement, schoolboy rowing being what it is today). The efforts of Buck Donaldson, Dick Appleby, and Tim Mann paid off with 11 members of '47 on hand for that class's 10th reunion appropriately climaxed by the dedication of a plaque on the boathouse to the memory of Dan Holder, '47's class advisor. Pete Brown '40, did an outstanding job as toastmaster, Dick Broome '48, announced the SAS Club of New York's intentions in the matter of a gift for Dr. Pell, Holly Whyte '35, presented a gift from the Alumni Association, and Dr. Pell's comments, which included a glowing tribute to his successor, Mr. W. H. Cameron, were accorded a standing ovation.

An innovation was introduced by the Class of '47 at this year's reunion. On Sunday morning before the Alumni Memorial Service of Holy Communion a group of alumni and 6th and 5th Formers met to discuss under the leadership of Holly Whyte the general topic of the success members of '47 had had in achieving the goals they had set for themselves. This meeting, the well-attended Memorial Service, and the dedication of the Holder plaque did much to give form to a part of the reunion that in the past had tended to trail off formlessly.

Dr. and Mrs. Pell have asked that the following messages be given to the Alumni:

"Our last Alumni Week End as 'undergraduates' will always remain in Edith's and my memory as the most wonderful of all! We know that many of you came because it was the last at which we would be your official host and hostess, and deeply we appreciate this.

"Your gifts -- that gorgeous print of the Barges and 'Greener' at Oxford, where once I mingled many drops of sweat with the waters of the Isis; and the fabulous collection of reference books you New York alumni are giving us -- overwhelmed us! Our new library at 'Perfect End' will be built around them and we hope you'll visit

WALTER J. LAIRD

Mr. Walter J. Laird, Vice-President of the Trustees of the Episcopal Church School Foundation, died suddenly on June 4th. In his death St. Andrew's School has suffered an incalculable loss. A member of the original Board of Trustees, Mr. Laird had always drawn heavily upon his great talents to serve St. Andrew's. Since his retirement from the position of Vice-President of the Wilmington Trust Company he had devoted more and more time to matters concerning the School, especially the planning for and construction of the New Wing. Mr. Laird's frequent visits to St. Andrew's invariably produced wise counsel and the reassurance that came from continued instances of his affectionate interest in all who worked here.

us often there to see them and us. The print will be flanked by two large pictures of bumping races on that same stretch of river, the books set in places of honor between the Bible and The Encyclopaedia of Modern American Humor (if a schoolmaster has mastered these, he should be able to rise to every daily crisis in his school)!

"But to tell you all the joy and pride and gratitude that is in our hearts would fill a whole issue of the NEWS LETTER, and this its Editor will not suffer. So farewell, my dear boys, and God bless you all!

WALDEN PELL II"

"I join Walden in all he has said above and also add my thanks for the beautiful flowers the Alumni Association sent me while I was in the hospital.

Affectionately,
EDITH PELL"

In its annual business meeting the Alumni Association adopted the following resolution to be presented to Dr. Pell at Commencement:

"WALDEN PELL OF ST. ANDREW'S

For over a quarter century
Headmaster and friend of each St.
Andreas.

Inspired by his faith,
Nurtured by his devotion and learning,
Taught by his dedicated example,
Encouraged by his wisdom and love,
The Alumni of the school
Will always remember
With affection

Ski Lodge Is Teepee Shaped

At right: Week-end ski lodge by architect Bruce Graham, A. I. A., in Wilmington, Vt., has double A frame which offers views from each side. Joint owners are the architect and Charles H. Slingluff jr. A weather-resistant, rigid insulating board, Homasote, is used as roofing on the teepee-shaped lodge. The A frame and roof decking exposed on inside are natural Douglas fir of a cinnamon color. Exterior wall panels of insulating board are painted barn red. Window trim is white.

Below: Informal living area two stories high shows exposed A frame of the structure. Cement floor painted dark gray has warm-air heating ducts buried in it. In middle of this area is the raised hearth of concrete surfaced with fieldstone under a black iron hood. A-shaped window frames view of Mt. Snow and ski trails. Deep bunks are built into each side of lodge living room. Sofa in foreground was built on site from maple boards. Interior scheme is in tones of orange and brown.

Above: Architect Bruce Graham and Diana Brewster, both New Yorkers, dance on the bridge across the brook leading to door of the private week-end ski lodge. Bridge is also front porch.

By Harriet Morrison

New Yorkers are unevenly divided on summer versus winter week-end houses. Many more city folk retreat to the country in the summer than in the winter. Those who have discovered the pleasures of winter week ends in the North may be a smaller group, but they are an enthusiastic, hardy lot. Winter sports are their meat.

Architect Bruce Graham's interest in winter sports gained momentum when he was supervising the construction of Sitzmark Lodge at Wilmington, Vt., which he designed. He decided to build himself a ski lodge near Mt. Snow. His lodge was finished this winter. Mr. Graham and co-owner Charles H. Slingluff jr. are now enjoying week ends in their own lodge. This summer they plan to widen the brook and create a swimming pool.

The ski lodge was designed to sleep twelve.

Three bedrooms are upstairs, and two on the main floor. There are views of snow, woods and mountains from all sides of the forty-one-foot-long rectangular structure in a teepee shape, thanks to what the architect calls "the double A frame." Each A has glass areas under a deep overhang. Snow rolls down the sides of the A which form the roof. The upstairs is reached via a ship's ladder.

The fireplace is the center for evening gatherings after a day on near-by ski trails. Housekeeping is kept to a minimum thanks to the concrete floor, informal furniture. The dining table at one side of the main living area is next to the corridor kitchen. Inside the main entrance is a sturdy bench for skiers to sit on while putting on or taking off boots. The furnace room in the center of the plan has wood pegs on which damp clothing can be hung.

THE GUILD REPORTER, AUGUST

Two Newcomers Step Up to Positions On IEB

Two newcomers whose unopposed nomination at the June convention in New York constituted election to the International Executive Board will be among the vice presidents at large to be seated at the organization meeting of the board set for October 19 at Washington. They are Richard P. Davis, Baltimore, and Kenneth Rieger, Toledo.

Davis is 31 years old, a native of Orange, N.J., and a graduate of St. Andrew's School at Middleton, Del., and of Bowdoin College, Brunswick, Me., class of 1950. His formal education was interrupted, in 1946 and 1947, by service in the U. S. Army in Japan and China.

Davis worked for two years on non-Guild newspapers in Meriden, Conn., and Potsdam, N.Y., before going to the Rochester Democrat & Chronicle as a reporter, in 1952. He immediately joined the Rochester Guild. In 1956 he went to the Baltimore Evening Sun's copydesk, transferring his Guild membership and activity to the new field.

He is now serving a second term as Baltimore local president. During this time he led the Guild local through a 17-month bargaining period which resulted in almost complete revision of its collective bargaining contract. In the same period the local gained a net increase of some 200 in membership.

His efforts led to his recognition, at the San Jose convention last year, as recipient of the Wilbur E. Bade memorial award for services at the local level in a volunteer capacity. The citation noted that Davis had "revitalized" the Baltimore Guild.

At the recent New York convention Davis served as chairman of the organizing committee, which reported out a program supporting the concept of making 1959-60 an "organizing year."

Air-Sea Search Is Continuing For Talbot Couple

Mr. and Mrs. George E. Dickson, Jr. Forced To Ditch Plane In Caribbean

Twenty-six planes are aloft today as the Coast Guard widens its search for a Talbot County couple missing since last Thursday in a single-engine plane they were forced to ditch in the Caribbean during a flight from Puerto Rico to the Caicos Island group.

The couple is Mr. and Mrs. George Edwards Dickson, Jr., of Wye Town Farm, near Easton. On an island-hopping honeymoon trip, they were married on December 29th at the home of the bride's sister and brother-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. John T. Firth, of Trappe. Mrs. Dickson, 24, is the former Mrs. Margaret Newbaker Spring, daughter of Philip C. Newbaker, of Easton. Mr. Dickson, 26, is the son of Mrs. Margaret Heckert Dickson, of Wye Town Farm.

It is believed that a faulty radio magnetic compass may have caused the couple to overshoot their destination and to ditch the Cessna 180 aircraft when it ran out of gas. With the radio compass out of order, it was noted that the gyro compass, set from the radio bearing, would also be in error.

Mr. Dickson's "Mayday" distress call was monitored by an Air Force C-54 in the vicinity, the pilot of which talked with him for some twenty minutes before the plane went down. The pilot circled and criss-crossed in an effort to fix the position of the Dickson plane through the strength of radio signals, but was unsuccessful in making visual contact.

The Dickson plane was equipped with two 12-foot inflatable life rafts, provisions for five days, Mae West jackets, and other emergency survival gear, all of which had been thoroughly checked before departure from the United States.

Navy and Air Force planes, as well as the Coast Guard cutter, Aurora, are searching a 300 square mile area. The search for the missing couple is being directed from Coast Guard headquarters in San Juan, Puerto Rico.

The couple left Baltimore on January 2nd, after Mr. Dickson, who has been flying for several years and holds a commercial pilot's license, took the necessary examinations and received an instrument flying rating from the Federal Aviation Agency at Friendship Airport in anticipation of the Caribbean trip.

Friends and relatives have received numerous letters and post cards from the couple during the trip, the last being dated January 20th and postmarked January 21st from St. Croix in the Virgin Islands. They made the short flight from St. Croix to San Juan, Puerto Rico, last Thursday morning. Refueling at San Juan, they took off, their destination the Caicos Island group in the Bahama chain where they were to refuel once again before proceeding to Nassau, their next point of call en route home.

The Navy said that the search will be continued.

The Dicksons had nearly made Nassau on a flight from San Juan, Mr. Dickson told the San Juan tower he was in trouble. Two minutes later, another plane in the area picked up the message that they were ditching.

Full Bottle of Whisky Rests in Church Wall

By PHILIP F. CROSLAND

There is a legend that a full bottle of whisky is embedded in the wall of Christ Episcopal Church.

This intriguing bit of information is one of the many facts and reports presented in "The Story of Christ Church Christiana Hundred and Its People" by Charles A. Silliman of Westover Hills. The book is available at local book stores.

Tracing the history of the church from its birth as an idea in 1848 to the last years of the rectorship of the Rev. Dr. William C. Munds, Mr. Silliman uses people to tell his story.

The part each of the 11 rectors played in the growth and history of the stone church is told against a background of the parishioners of the day, many of them family names still active in the worship of the church.

THE WHISKY STORY goes back to 1855. One version has it that an Irish storemason named Robert Merchant came to work with the bottle one morning and was preparing to take a drink when Alexis du Pont paid one of his regular visits to the construction site.

Fearing detection, Merchant placed the bottle in the wall he was building, but not before Mr. du Pont had seen him. Without letting on that he suspected anything, Mr. du Pont continued his supervision in the area where Merchant was working until the mortar had hardened and the bottle was sealed away for good.

Merchant never got over the event. He claimed it was the first time in his life he was unable to get a drink out of a bottle of whisky he had purchased.

Mr. Silliman's story begins in the days of the Brandywine Manufacturers Sunday School, conducted by all faiths. Three sisters who made the school a success, and who later carried this devotion to their work at Christ Church, were Eleuthera du Pont Smith, Victorine Bauduy and Sophie Madeleine du Pont.

IN THOSE DAYS, most of the Episcopal families in the area now surrounding Christ Church, were members of Trinity Church, and the new congregation received little encouragement from its older neighbor.

The Trinity rector, the Rev. Edwin M. Van Deusen, had "high church" leanings, and when the Rev. Samuel C. Brinckle, a clergyman with evangelical leanings, began to form the nucleus of a parish, he was confronted with active opposition.

But with the support of Bishop Alfred Lee and such steadfast churchmen as Admiral Samuel F. du Pont, a parish was organized and took the name of Christ Church, in order to avoid the name of a saint, considered a mark of "high" churchmanship.

Christ Church was admitted to the Diocese of Delaware in 1851. There were 26 persons at the first communion, and Mr. Brinckle received $300 a year.

Mr. Brinckle died during the Civil War on March 12, 1863.

Prevented from being consecrated at first because of an outstanding debt, Christ Church went through the years unconsecrated until 1948. Lack of consecration was partially responsible for the resignation of one of its rectors.

The Rev. John Summerfield Buntin, who served the parish from August, 1899, until March 1908, tried his best to have it consecrated. He was told the Du Pont Company held title to the land and it could not be conveyed.

ARGUING THAT consecration meant giving to God, Mr. Buntin became increasingly unhappy about the situation, finally resolving that he would never again be rector of a church that did not belong to God.

This didn't worry the tenth rector, the Rev. Frederick T. Ashton, however. It was his opinion that because of its use through the years as a house of God, it was consecrated and hallowed.

One rector of the church was almost arrested as a murderer. He was the Rev. William Henry Laird who served the parish from May, 1908, until June, 1916, when he resigned to become rector of Immanuel Church. He had been serving both churches for several years.

Mr. and Mrs. Laird were in England in the summer of 1910 and, as they boarded the steamship for the return voyage, Mr. Laird was mistaken for a Dr. Hawley Crippen of England, suspected of murdering his wife and running off with his secretary. The error was quickly straightened out.

Mr. Silliman tells of the coming of Firmin Swinnen as organist in 1925, due largely to the efforts of Henry F. du

AUTHOR AND BOOK—Charles A. Silliman, Westover Hills, displays a history of Christ Church, Christiana Hundred, which he has written. Mr. Silliman is a former Journal-Every Evening employee.

Pont. On his first visit to Wilmington, Mr. Swinnen had a bad experience on the street car and described the "old Toonerville trolley" to his wife. That good woman took him seriously, and more than once directed people in all seriousness how to get to the church on "the Toonerville trolley."

THERE ARE stories of heroism during the constant threat of powder explosions in the early days along the Brandywine, and Christ Church rectors were often called upon to comfort families who had lost dear ones.

Getting to church was often a problem, and stories are related of snow higher than the fence tops. The Rev. John S. Bunting had to be rescued from a snow drift into which he toppled on one occasion.

An entire chapter is devoted to the work of Dr. Munds, who came to the parish in November, 1942 and retired earlier this year. It is noted that due to his efforts the church had over 1,000 communicants and property valued at $2,250,000 at the time of its consecration in 1943 by the Rt. Rev. Dr. Arthur R. McKinstry.

Rectors of Christ Church in chronological order through Dr. Munds, and their approximate years of service, are: Mr. Brinckle, 15 years; the Rev. William A. Newbold, six years; the Rev. Isaac Newton Stanger, three years; the Rev. Dudley D. Smith, two years; the Rev. Hamilton M. Bartlett, six years; the Rev. Charles A. Horne, two years; Mr. Bunting, nine years; Mr. Laird, eight years; the Rev. Roberts Coles, three years; Mr. Ashton, 23 years, and Dr. Munds, 18 years.

Not included in Mr. Silliman's book is the Rev. Dr. John L. O'Hear, who became rector of Christ Church this year.

Pink Plague

Most of the maledictions heard on the SAS campus nowadays are being directed at the bacterium, virus, bug, or evil spirit that has caused the scarletina epidemic that has had the School in quarantine since February 8th and has caused the cancellation of the winter dance and a third of what promised to be successful basketball and wrestling seasons.

There haven't been as many down at any one time as there were in last year's Asian flu epidemic, but no sooner is the Infirmary cleared of one group of sufferers, than two or more are turned up bearing the tell-tale rash. Fortunately miracle drugs seem to have made this disease less dangerous than it was in the good old days, and most of the victims get away with about a week in the Infirmary and usually not more than two days of real discomfort.

Alumni interest in the "Pink Plague", as some of the boys call it, could be more than academic. Absolute cancellation of the Sixth Form Dance seemed to be such a heartless action in view of the heartache and the thousand natural shocks caused by the quarantine that the boys were given permission to postpone their dance until the weekend of April 4th. Since the Fifth Form Dance will also take place in the spring term, since the 10th and 25th reunions of '49 and '34 are to be held over the weekend of April 25th, and since the usual spring term hurly burly will be going on between times, the School plans to ask the Alumni Council meeting of March 6th to MOVE THE 1959 ALUMNI DAY FROM MAY 23d to OCTOBER 10TH. Anyone who feels strongly on the matter can get in touch with a council member, appear at the March 6th meeting, write a letter to the Alumni Office, or hold a private alumni day on a date of his own choice.

Despite the disappointments the morale of the School has never been better. Intramural athletics have proved to be lively fun (although everyone agrees no real substitute for the interscholastic sort); even the faculty has entered the sports picture, downing a Fifth Form volley ball team and a non-varsity Sixth Form basketball team.

Burns '35 Outtalks Russians Again

Once again Findlay Burns '35 has talked the Russians out of holding an American military truck convoy en route to Berlin. This time both the Tribune and the Times mentioned Burns' role in settling the Contretemps, but so far there has been no really circumstantial account of what surely must be the hardest job in the whole business, getting the Russians to let go.

W. H. C. Preserved in Oil

The portrait of W. H. Cameron now gazes benignly down from a wall in the dining room. The picture painted by Alice Kent Stoddard, who painted the portraits of Bishop Cook, Bishop McKinstry, and Dr. Pell, was the gift of the Class of 1958. Jerry Wigglesworth, last year's Senior Praefect, made the official presentation after a Sunday dinner early in February.

Sunflower State Flag in Chapel

At the same time the Cameron portrait was unveiled the School was presented with the flag of Kansas, which has joined the other state flags in the Chapel. This flag was the gift of Wigglesworth and his fellow Kansan, who was also Senior Praefect, John Cogswell, '57.

SAS Marksman Score

It's hard to judge reader reaction to anything in the NEWSLETTER, but from a recent sampling of opinion (two people were polled) we have learned that the presenting of reports from the various departments is a worthy enterprise. Thus we continue the practice, this time jumping from the academic to extra-curricular. Here is a report on the achievements of the Rifle Club by Nolan Lushington, Librarian and faculty advisor to the shooters:

"In March 1958 the Rifle Club won the Delaware Junior Division of the National Indoor Rifle matches with a score of 1456. Recently it has been learned that this score was high enough to rank St. Andrew's as the 25th School team in the nation out of more than 791 rifle teams. Erling Speer, '58, last year's captain, placed in the top 200 competitors out of 3,879. Other members of the state championship were: Douglas Pell, '58, (now a member of the MIT freshman rifle team), Orland Campbell (last year's Delaware State Champion) and Howard Snyder.

"In January 1959 several members of the current St. Andrew's team won recognition by qualifying for high Junior National Rifle Association Awards. Orland Campbell, captain, won the Distinguished Rifleman award, the highest qualification award in the nation, becoming the second St. Andrew to do so. Fred Case, '57, won it in 1957. Howard Snyder, Henry Hillenmeyer and Andrew Fairfield qualified as Experts, Andy doing so in only one term of firing and the first St. Andrew to accomplish this since Powell Hutton, '55, became the first St. Andrew's Expert in 1955."

Ulrich would like to see St. Andrews who find themselves in his part of Germany.

The Church Welcomes THE EPISCOPALIAN

This month the Episcopal Church began an experiment in magazine journalism called THE EPISCOPALIAN.

From the looks of the first issue, the "experiment" will be well-received.

Making use of new and modern type faces, plenty of pictures, and up to four colors, the magazine is printed on high-quality slick paper. It always will contain a minimum of 48 pages and advertising will be held purposely to below 33 per cent. It will reach subscribers' homes the second week in each month so that it will supplement, rather than compete with most other monthly publications. In addition, surveys have shown that most diocesan publications — such as NOW — are delivered either the first or last week in each month, and THE EPISCOPALIAN does not desire to conflict with such periodicals.

The paid circulation of the new magazine already has reached the 50,000 mark, over 13,000 more copies than FORTH, its predecessor, was printing.

All of the editors of the new magazine are lay persons and most of the articles and picture stories will be produced by the laity for the laity. Henry McCorkle, of Swarthmore, Pa., is the editor-in-chief of the new publication.

According to Mr. McCorkle, the last real frontier on earth — the soul of Man — will be THE EPISCOPALIAN'S area of major exploration. A new series by C. S. Lewis, the brilliant English author, begins this exploration in the first issue of THE EPISCOPALIAN.

Another article in the April issue was "The Episcopal — Who Is He?" The feature dealt solely with members of our church who have reached the NOW's editor gets a sneak preview of THE EPISCOPALIAN in Washington, D.C., during the annual convention of the Associated Church Press April 5-8 at the Hotel Roosevelt. From the grins on the faces, you would think the whole group was on THE EPISCOPALIAN's editorial board. Left to right, Henry McCorkle, the real editor; Gordon Baker, head of public relations for the Anglican Church in Canada; Mrs. Marian Wiegmann, editor of The Advance, Diocese of Chicago; NOW's blue penciller; and Jack Chapin, editor of The Record, Diocese of Michigan. Mr. McCorkle made a special trip from the convention to Connecticut, where the magazine is printed, in order that Episcopal delegates could see the first issue. He returned with exactly one copy! pinnacle in their various professional fields.

The magazine will spotlight one diocese each issue, publishing a map of the diocese and telling something about it. Alabama is the first diocese to be honored, but they will not be presented alphabetically. Instead, the spotlight will jump at random over the country.

Circulation representatives for the new magazine are being set up in each parish and mission. The Cathedral Church of St. John, Wilmington, already has subscribed 100 per cent to THE EPISCOPALIAN, the largest church in the country to do so at the present time and the very first Cathedral church.

The Cathedral's acceptance was made possible by an anonymous donor, and every member of the congregation will receive the magazine for the next nine months. During that period of time, Cathedral parishioners have been asked by Mr. McCorkle to evaluate with a series of questionnaires the appeal of the magazine, its contents, what it is saying, and how much it is enjoyed.

R. C. duPont, Jr., Heads Baker's Field Airport

The development of a local, private airport into a relatively large commercial airfield capable of accommodating feeder airline traffic has been undertaken at Baker's Field on Route 896, a mile and one-half south of the New Summit Bridge.

This was announced today by Richard C. duPont, Jr., president, and one of the pilots for Summit Aviation, Inc., the newly-formed company which will operate the field. The firm's vice president is Franklyn B. Baker, who has been the owner-operator of Baker's Field for the past eleven years.

When completed, Mr. duPont said, Summit Aviation's physical facilities will include two runways—one rebuilt to 4,000 feet, hangar space for some 25 private aircraft plus unlimited outside tie-down space, a complete airplane maintenance shop, office space, a lounge and a 100 car parking lot.

The airfield will offer hangar rental, aircraft repair and maintenance, flight instruction and agricultural aviation services.

In addition it will be the home field for Manor Aviation, Inc., a certified charter service which is now operating out of New Castle County Airport.

Engineering surveys and design for development of the field were furnished by the engineering consultant firm, Edward H. Richardson Associates, Inc., of Newark, Delaware.

Ten individual "T" hangars have just been completed and new runway lights were turned on for the first time last week. Construction of a large hangar-lounge-office building is now under way, and the target date for completion of the entire project is early spring.

"Because of the increasing air traffic in New Castle County, the ever widening interest in private flying and the expanding industrial community, we believe Summit Aviation's enlarged facilities and complete flying services will fill a growing need and be a valuable asset to both Delaware and eastern Maryland," the Summit president stated.

"We are fortunate to have for our location a large tract which offers a number of natural advantages," Mr. duPont continued. "Topography and soil conditions are ideal for an airfield and atmospheric conditions in the area are such that we often have adequate flight ceiling and visibility when the County airport is closed down by the weather. Baker's Field is only five minutes from New Castle County Airport by air and will be only fifteen minutes away by car when the new Federal highway is completed."

Mr. duPont, a former Mohawk Airlines pilot, is an experienced flyer holding FAA accreditation in a number of specialized phases of aviation.

"In view of his experience in all aspects of executive work, I believe that Mr. Nixon is the best-qualified candidate for President. Prior to his election to Congress, he was an attorney in his home town of Whittier, Calif., and then in the Office of Emergency Management. During the war he was on active duty with the Navy, attaining the rank of Lieutenant Commander. He was elected to two consecutive terms in the House of Representatives, and was then elected to the Senate. Following his election as Vice President in 1952, Mr. Nixon's executive duties broadened to include acting as presiding officer at Cabinet and Security Council meetings, and acting as President during Mr. Eisenhower's illness and his absences from the country.

"In addition, I particularly support Mr. Nixon's views on private enterprise and on decentralization of Federal power. In this respect, I feel that the Democrats have 'lost the way.'

"I am supporting Mr. Nixon because I sincerely believe that his experience and his policies make him the man the country needs."

ST. ANDREW'S CITED IN PREP ARTICLE

In the last issue of Esquire magazine appears an article on the American prep school, or, should I say, the prep school of prestige. The article was, of course, written by a former member of this select society and in the adjectival language of a New Englander. The article was primarily devoted to those schools which form the core of preparatory education such as Lawrenceville, K. St. George's, and Choate. However, in the ranks of this group there appeared the name of St. Andrew's School. Don't misunderstand me, we are not classified with the previously mentioned schools, but we are recognized as capable of belonging to the group. The author, almost apologetically, admits that he cannot put us in the select group because he holds limited knowledge of our institution.

The mere presence of St. Andrew's in this article should be considered a milestone in the school's history. It has now become quite apparent that we have, over our relatively short span of existence compared to Andover's 182 years and Exeter's 170 years, established ourselves as a school of distinction.

114 Fathers Visited St. Andrew's Over Weekend

With 114 fathers on campus this past week-end, St. Andrew's enjoyed its largest turnout of this sort in the history of the school. The visitors came from far and near to view their sons' classrooms and playing field activities, with Mr. John F. Beard, of Tampa, Florida, setting the long distance record for travel to the reunion. Among the Delaware fathers who visited St. Andrew's were: Dr. William G. Batt, Newark; Mr. Thomas J. Bayard, III, Centerville; Capt. Walter L. Bennett, Jr., Lewes; Mr. N. B. Browning, Wilmington; Mr. Henry R. Buckaloo, Lewes; Mr. Perry T. Burton, Lewes; Mr. J. M. Hamilton, Jr., Wilmington; Mr. Peter D. Kaspar, Dover; Mr. R. E. McCullough, Dover; Mr. Charles D. ## Henlopen Dune Life Described at Library

William Amos, chairman of the science department of St. Andrew's School, Middletown, gave an illustrated lecture last night in the Wilmington Library about the Cape Henlopen sand dunes. Addressing a meeting of the Society of Natural History of Delaware, Mr. Amos described the abundance of plant, animal, and insect life on the dunes, that, coupled with their geological features makes the dunes such a fascinating study. Dr. Robert S. Howard, president of the society, introduced the speaker.

Whistling Waco In St. Andrew's Show for Dads

Dads, be of good cheer; there's a whistler all for you.

It's a whistling waco and one of the many exotic items included in the annual Fathers' Week-end exhibit at St. Andrew's School, Middletown.

And, what in the world is a whistling waco? Very simple—if you know your archaeology. A whistling waco is a ceramic container—a pot, if you will—which, when emptied, whistles.

Made over 2,000 years ago by South American Indians in Peru, the waco and other exciting articles went on display yesterday for Fathers' Week-end proceedings which continue through Monday.

The exhibit, entitled "Peru—Land of Contrasts," will be open to the public after Monday.

John Schoonover, St. Andrew's School student, whistles back at the whistling waco, poured by Richardson Hillier, chairman of the school history department. The Peruvian Indian relic, which whistles when emptied, is part of the Fathers' Week-end exhibit at the school.

New Shaw Letters Reveal Him As Pygmalion to an American

By SANKA KNOX

A collection of letters from the letters of Shaw to Molly George Bernard Shaw to an American actress and painter will be made public Wednesday, disclosing a relationship that is scarcely hinted at in works on the playwright.

The recipient of the letters, Molly Tompkins, now emerges as a formidable contender for a place alongside Ellen Terry and Mrs. Patrick Campbell.

Unknown except to a few persons and hidden for years, the letters will be published here by Clarkson N. Potter. The collection contains more than 125 letters, written between 1921 and 1949. Molly Tompkins, who died earlier this year, was the wife of Laurence Tompkins of Atlanta.

Like the published accounts and reports of Shaw's relationships with Ellen Terry and Mrs. Campbell, the English actresses, careful not to forget that they are old, and that even when young people adore them, to say nothing of when they don't, they may greatly dislike to be touched by them in any but the most grandfatherly or grandmotherly fashion. * * * Also you must remember that, whatever age we may be in fairyland, in realistic society we are an old man and a young thing, and that to exhibit ourselves in any other relation would be ridiculous and most unbecoming. So do not be angry if I play my part of Pantaloon to your Columbine with my usual histrionic skill.

Throughout many letters Shaw also acted the part of the professor in "Pygmalion," and assigned the role of Eliza Doolittle, with variations, to Mrs. Tompkins.

Mrs. Tompkins went to England with her husband in 1921. She was fresh from a walk-on part in a stage production here and had a Georgia accent and an ambition for a stage career in England.

Shaw took her to task for her speech and sent her to the Royal Academy; instructed her in the etiquette of addressing a letter and in dressing.

Before the academy and the playwright had done their work, Mrs. Tompkins, as Shaw put it, was something of a "Sarah from Red Gulch."

Mrs. Tompkins became a painter, and again, as her son said, "G. B. S. got into the act, and told her how to do it; how to go about fresco work—how to mix in the eggs."

Young Mr. and Mrs. Tompkins went to London primarily to see Shaw, the son related. "They thought he was a prophet crying in the wilderness, and wanted to build a special theatre for his plays."

Mrs. Tompkins, whose real name was Mary—"Molly", appeared a better stage name to Shaw—remained abroad until 1941. She was divorced from her husband in the mid-Thirties, but was remarried to him when the war ended.

During the depression, the Tompkins' funds were low, and Shaw undertook the schooling of their son, Peter Tompkins' name occurs frequently in the letters.

In 1942, referring to a photograph taken of him in 1924, Shaw wrote:

"It is a picture of a man of 68, still presentable. He is now in his 84th year, a ghastly old spectre who has outstayed his welcome, and would shock you and horrify Peter if he were inconsiderate enough to let you see him. * * * I can still read and even write quite a bit; so correspondence is possible, but not bodily vision or contact. The man you knew is dead."

Young Quillin enjoying tour of Europe

J. D. Quillin, III, son of Mr and Mrs J. D. Quillin of Ocean City, is touring Europe after his graduation from the University of Delaware last June. Here are excerpts from his recent letters:

Dear Mom and Dad, This is my first night in Madrid. So far, I am making out fine. I haven't had much of a chance to talk to people, but otherwise things are O. K.

There was a two hour delay in Washington in leaving, because the Airport Radar was not working. Once we took off, the trip took 45 minutes to New York. I had only an hour to wait, the trip across the Atlantic, by Jet, took only 6 hours, but because of the time difference, it was 11 hours by my watch. Spain and Portugal are 5 hrs. ahead of U S time.

Lisbon, Portugal is a nice place. There are two parts of it. The old and the new. The same is true here in Madrid. In Lisbon there are many Volks Wagons and Motor Bikes. The taxis are Mercedes 190s. The streets are very narrow in Lisbon, the size of our alleys. The traffic is heavy and there are many people on the sidewalks. The people live off the water. They dry a lot of fish they catch. There are no ice boxes in the Market place. The fish just lay out in the open in the stores. It doesn't smell too good in the stores either. Around Lisbon there are many housing projects. The worker buys one of these houses by giving the Government one-fifth of his pay each month for 20 years. The houses are going like hot cakes. In Madrid the shops close at 8:30 p. m. Drinks are not served anywhere before 9 p. m. Night clubs open at 11 p. m and close at 3 a. m. From here I am going to Barcelona and Sunday I am going to see a Bull fight. September 29th

I am at the Nice Airport waiting to leave for Rome. My Jet is 1 hr. late, nice was very nice, and while here, I went to Morocco and also to Monte-Carlo, the famous gambling house. So far, I have enjoyed Nice and Madrid the best, every where though, the people are very friendly. From Rome, I plan to travel by bus and train for awhile probably to Germany, then fly some more. Those Jets are really smooth! Yesterday I swam all afternoon in the Mediterranean Sea, the Beach is all stones.

October 6th. Arrived here at the Hotel De La Paix, Lausanne, Switzerland. My room overlooks a lake, and it is just beautiful. This Hotel allows pets—dogs—but charges for them. They are allowed everywhere except the Dining room. I am awfully glad that I am traveling alone. I have met many nice people. I toured Madrid with a young couple stationed in Germany. I went to the Bullfights with four girls staying at the same Hotel that I was in Madrid. I also met an old German Doctor, now living in Kenya. He was a riot! In

British-Born Weatherby Named To Lead 1961 Columbia Booters

British-born Simon Weatherby has been named captain of the 1961 Columbia University soccer squad, according to an announcement made yesterday by Coach Joe Molder.

Weatherby was the starting right halfback on this year's Lion eleven. The team posted the best record since the return of the sport to the Morningside Heights campus four years ago.

He studied at Winchester College in England and currently lists his hometown as Stockcross, Berkshire. Weatherby resides in an apartment near the Columbia campus during the academic year.

Born on Dec. 31, 1938, Weatherby is the first foreign-born student to captain the Lion soccer team since the resumption of the sport. He succeeds Herbert Buehler, this year's captain.

Though he failed to score a goal during the regular season, Weatherby distinguished himself by excellent ball-handling and dribbling techniques. These enabled several of his fellow backs to score goals on his passes.

The 6-foot 2-inch, 190-pounder is the son of Peter Weatherby, the soccer squad. Also, he participated in dramatics and the various literary activities of father. In addition to his soccer,

JOHN M. CUMMINGS
Dilworth-Hemphill
Row Stirs Politics

HOLY WEEK in Philadelphia was marked by customary services in most churches of the city. It was also marked by an unholy controversy between Mayor Dilworth and Controller Hemphill.

The religious phase of this most solemn week in the Christian calendar is adequately dealt with in other columns of this family newspaper. It is the purpose of this corner to address itself to the political implications in the exchange of compliments by Mr. Dilworth and Mr. Hemphill.

It will be recalled the latest ruction of these municipal gladiators occurred in mid-week. It was fired by the Controller's demand on the Mayor for certain letters which, Mr. Hemphill said, had disappeared from the file concerned with the city's purchase of the old Broad Street Station site from the Pennsylvania Railroad.

It appears the letters represented confidential notes back and forth between Mayor Dilworth and James M. Symes, chairman of the railroad's board of directors. At the request of Mr. Symes, Mayor Dilworth released some, if not all, of the correspondence to the press. He refused to send copies to Controller Hemphill, thereby emphasizing the high regard and esteem in which he holds a fellow official.

MR. SYMES felt that the demand for the correspondence, which Mr. Hemphill said was necessary to a completion of his audit of the transaction between the city and the railroad, carried the implication the deal might not have been open and aboveboard. It was, therefore, at the request of Mr. Symes, not at the demand of Controller Hemphill, that the correspondence was released.

As the deal approached a climax Mayor Dilworth wrote Mr. Symes a letter in which he stated City Council would be apprised of its progress. He tossed in this paragraph:

"I shall also inform Council that this must be kept as quiet as politicians can keep anything, as you have to talk to Uris Brothers (builders) and others interested in the Penn Center area."

While there is no record of any councilman blathering the details of the deal, it is interesting to note the opinion of the Mayor that politicians find it difficult, even impossible, to keep a secret.

MR. DILWORTH himself is finding it difficult to conceal his long burning desire to become Governor of the Commonwealth.

Mr. Hemphill is equally ardent in his ambition to step into the Mayor's office. In simple justice to the Controller, however, it should be added that if Bill Green insists he'll be content with another term in his present post. In fact, he has the blessing of the Green organization for renomination as Controller at the primary election May 16.

Not until next year will the Mayor have an opportunity to offer himself as a candidate for Governor, subject, of course, to the wishes of Congressmen Green, Gov. Lawrence and other big wheels among the Democratic high rollers.

The Mayor describes Hemphill as a "pious phony." He says the Controller is politically ambitious and "the time has come to blow the whistle on this guy."

IT IS highly unlikely, however, the Mayor himself will toot the whistle. No one in City Hall is trying to keep secret the knowledge that Bill Green favors Hemphill for another term. Since the Controller is in a position to needle the Mayor or any other city official, it may properly be assumed that Mr. Green is familiar with the nature of the injections Mr. Hemphill is giving Mr. Dilworth.

Our Mayor, for all his suavity and outward appearance of calm, has a low boiling point. He can't get along with Hemphill. That's for sure.

Mr. Dilworth, moreover, knows what it means to hear the whistle blow. He heard it a few years ago when it was blown by the then Mayor of Pittsburgh, Dave Lawrence, and the town's present Mayor, Joe Barr. In blowing the whistle they blew Mr. Dilworth out of the running for Governor. Mr. Lawrence took the Democratic nomination for himself alone.

NEXT year a Governor and a United States Senator will be chosen in Pennsylvania. Joe Clark comes up for renomination and, if successful, for re-election.

Politically, Dilworth and Clark came up together in Philadelphia. Joe was Controller, Dilworth C. Treasurer. Joe became Mayor, Dilworth District Attorney. Joe went to Washington, Dilworth to the Mayor's office. Once Dilworth held the Democratic nomination for Governor.

In the unlikely event of their teaming up again and marching forth to war, the outcome could mean a continuance of their political careers—or curtains! And no politician we know of can keep that a secret.

Hemphill Is Riding a White Horse —And Dilworth Feels Its Breath

By JOHN G. McCULLOUGH
Of The Bulletin Staff

The name is Alexander Hemphill, no middle name.

The background is Chestnut Hill lawyer and Democratic organization man.

The latest claim to the headlines is the City Hall payroll and contract scandals.

But who is Hemphill? Where did he come from?

What, as the politicians say, does he want?

Hemphill, who turned 40 last Monday, has emerged thus far in the role of a fearless crusader riding a white horse and wearing shining armor. This is a part Mayor Dilworth likes to keep for himself.

Urge for High Office

Hemphill, it should be noted straight off, has seven children, a collie named Benny, more than 100 assorted clay, briar and corn-cob pipes, a big, old stone home and an urge to some day be mayor, governor or United States senator.

It also can be said that Hemphill is a close friend of both U. S. Sen. Joseph S. Clark and U. S. Rep. William J. Green, Jr., Philadelphia Democratic chairman, who apparently have little else in common.

The congressman and Mrs. Green are, in fact, godparents to Hemphill's daughter, Christina, who was born on January 29, 1959.

Dilworth became embroiled in the controversy should be said, too, that political glands and is pushing too hard and too fast. Dilworth has the feeling, in fact, that Hemphill is already stepping on his heels.

'Sure I'm Ambitious'

Hemphill will admit he is ambitious. But he always adds that he is not in a hurry and is certainly not crowding anyone.

"Sure I'm ambitious," Hemphill said yesterday.

"People often ask me where I want to go in politics. I tell them I want to go up."

"In politics you have to go up—or you go down and out."

Hemphill, a six-footer who appears shorter because he habitually leans forward, says he cannot understand why Dilworth is annoyed at him.

"I consider Dilworth," he says, "the best mayor Philadelphia or any other city ever had. He is older and more experienced than I. Our political paths just don't cross. He has no reason to fight with me."

But Dilworth has been fighting with Hemphill and for a long time.

'Tries to Duck Publicity'

Dilworth contends that Hemphill has been pushing the probe of municipal fraud and corruption for his own political advantage. Hemphill, the mayor claims, wants to build himself up with Green and the Democratic organization and has been careful to avoid exposing any politically powerful

This kind of talk, according

That figure was doubled in an estimate given by Douglas M. Pratt, PTC president, who was on hand with newsmen and other officials at the Tioga station of the elevated when Hemphill pointed out the "shortcuts" in the repair work.

Pratt said the loss would probably be between $150,000 and $200,000. An exact figure awaits a report from the engineering firm of Gordon Associates hired by the PTC to investigate Hemphill's allegations.

Hemphill took charge of a mobile press conference which began at the Tioga Station and moved up and down the tracks—interrupted periodically by passing trains.

Using a portable loudspeaker Hemphill pointed out spots where rusted metal had been covered by paint. Specifications, he said, called for the contractors to remove the rust by sandblast or air brush.

Hemphill concentrated most of his attention on the rehabilitation of expansion joints on the elevated tracks.

Hemphill pointed to smudges to Hemphill, is "completely unfair."

"I don't try for publicity," he insists. "In fact I've tried to duck it. I answered direct questions from reporters, but even then I have said nothing until I checked with the district attorney to make certain that my answers would not impair the investigation."

Then with the air of a man who has said the same thing a million or more times, Hemphill added: "I've just been doing my job, and in my job you are bound to irritate some people."

"We have to look into every department and check spending, work hours and the like. We point out weaknesses and recommend improvements."

"Sometimes the people involved don't like it, but the better we do in this office our jobs, the more people we will irritate."

Hemphill spoke from behind the desk in an office on the ground floor of City Hall. On the walls were copies of paintings by Rouault and Utrillo.

Hemphill buys these and other prints in quantity and frames them himself.

Pipes and More Pipes

A rack on his desk held six pipes. A huge ashtray contained nine more. Another ashtray, on a big conference table, had five pipes.

Hemphill buys clay and corn-cob pipes in box lots these days because, he explains, "I lose or break a lot of them."

There are also pipes, tins of tobacco and huge ashtrays all through Hemphill's home at 398 E. Evergreen av., Chestnut Hill. It is a house of children, music, paintings—and politics.

The Hemphills—she is the former Jean Calves of Chestnut Hill—have been married since 1945 and have six daughters and one son.

She's a Committeewoman

Mrs. Hemphill, who looks like a subdeb, is an elected Democratic committeewoman in her neighborhood, the 48th division of the 22d ward. Her "partner" in the division, an elected Democratic committeeman, is her husband.

"We work hard at politics," Hemphill said. "In the primary election on May 16 both of us were at the polling place and managed to get out 105 of the 200 registered Democrats in our division."

"This was better than the 50 per cent turnout that Bill Green asked for."

Hemphill, who has pointed out repeatedly that no politicians have been involved in the municipal scandals, voices sharp annoyance at those who say "all politicians are crooked."

"Our entire system of government," he said, "is based upon good political leadership. Good leadership means good politics, and good politics means good government."

"More people should get into organization politics."

Entered Politics at 8

Hemphill himself had a very early start in politics.

At eight he led a political parade along the streets of West Chester to drum up support for his late father, John Hemphill, who was the Democratic candidate for governor in 1930.

"We had about 75 kids in our parade," Hemphill recalls, "banging on toy drums and frying pans— but still Dad lost."

Hemphill, born in West Chester, points out that nine members of his family have been Democratic chairmen in Chester County and that he is a descendant of Judge Joseph Hemphill, who helped Thomas Jefferson form the Democratic Party.

Hemphill was graduated from St. Andrew's School in Middletown, Del., in 1940 and entered the University of Pennsylvania.

When World War II came, Hemphill went into the Navy's training program and took both flight and deck training at Cornell, Columbia, Colgate and the University of North Carolina.

Not in Hurry

Alexander Hemphill

Good Soccer Player

He was a good soccer player, but recalls that he was moved by the Navy from college to college so often "that in some games I didn't know who to pass to."

Hemphill was a Navy ensign stationed in Texas when he married. He left the service in September, 1946, and entered Penn Law School.

During the Dilworth-Clark campaigns of 1947 and 1949, Hemphill served as a volunteer watcher for the Democrats at polling places in the downtown "river wards."

"It seemed to me," he said, "that the same people were going in and out of the polling places all day long, but I was just a college boy and had no idea of what to do about it."

Hemphill finished law school in 1949 — and has been active in politics as well as in a long list of civic organizations since.

Lost to Hugh Scott

In 1954 Hemphill, with the backing of then Mayor Clark, was the Democratic candidate for Congress in the 6th district against Hugh Scott, who then represented the district in the U. S. House.

"I lost that one," Hemphill recalls, "but I certainly learned a lot about campaigning."

When Hemphill was put on the Democratic organization slate as the candidate for city controller in 1957, Mayor Dilworth was quick to claim credit for his selection.

Dilworth that year had objected bitterly to others who were put on the ticket and said Hemphill, "an ideal type of progressive young Democrat," was put on the ticket as the result of his protests.

Since he started as city controller in 1958, Hemphill has criticized virtually every municipal department. He has been called a "pious phony" by Dilworth and a "sad-sack windbag" by Chief Magistrate Joseph J. Hersch.

Green Praises Hemphill

But Congressman Green, who has found great comfort in that the scandals haven't involved politicians, has praised Hemphill as "a necessary and effective hairshirt who is doing a good job for the city and for the Democratic Party."

The Hemphills and the Greens have summer places a few blocks apart in Longport, N. J., and see a lot of each other.

A few months ago Hemphill was hoping to get Green's endorsement for district attorney. It went instead to James C. Crumlish, Jr. Hemphill was given the OK, however, to run for another term as city controller.

Of all the news accounts in which Hemphill has figured since the start of the current probe, none has given him more satisfaction than one that appeared recently in the alumni news letter of St. Andrew's School.

This item told how Hemphill "has over the past year become identified in the public mind as the gadfly of Philadelphia politics" but now has turned up solid results in his investigation.

"Hemphill '40 Vindicated," the headline read.

CANDAL UNFOLDS IN PHILADELPHIA

uthless Clean-Up' Vowed by Mayor Dilworth

By WILLIAM G. WEART

Special to The New York Times

PHILADELPHIA, May 27—City Hall scandal, involving a host of whiskey, draped with 30 bills, television sets, other viola and alleged fraud, has taken the Democratic administration.

The scandal is the first blot on the progressive movement since the national recession in the decade since a er swept a corrupt Republican machine out of City Hall for a sixty-seven-year reign.

Mayor Richardson Dilworth interrupted an around-the-world tour to return this week for what he called a "ruthless" ban-up. He began by dismissing five city employees, including Treasurer George Dilauro, omitting shake-ups in three municipal departments that deal with private property, the der department heads to pressuring the Civil Service Commission.

The administration also filed a suit to recover $1,815,000. The money was lost, the suit says, in a conspiracy involving the "Frankford Elevated Transit Line" that began in

Transit Company Accused

The principal defendants are Philadelphia Transportation Company, which operates the high-speed subway and elevated stem for the city, and Eli G. Davis, a contractor who is now in jail on charges of bribery and conspiracy.

Gift-giving by Mr. Davis led to an investigation and complaints that the city had been overcharged for some work and paid in full for repairs that l short of contact specifications or were not done at all.

City Treasurer D. Lauro, Deputy Commissioner George O. Gorman and Milton

asserment, assistant chief of an accounting division in the finance Department, were dismissed by Mr. Dilworth because ey had accepted from Mr. Davis a total of $550 in cash, rapped around bottles of isky.

When Procurement Commissioner Michael J. Sura praised the ability of his discharged puty, the Mayor gave Mr. Sura minutes in which to nd a new job and resign. He signed yesterday.

5 Face Criminal Charges

Thus far, criminal action has been brought against five persons—Mr. Travis, George H.

nith Jr., a retired vice president of the transportation company, and three dismissed city employees—John E. Francis, deputy public property commissioner; Harold V. Varani, architect; and an engineering director in ublic property, and Benjamin Barone, former confidential secretary to the Commissioner of Public Property, William T. Bennett.

Mr. Gennetti reported yesterday that the city's suit against the transit company was based in part on Mr. Smith's sworn testimony that Douglas M.

Pratt, president of the transportation company, had instructed him to "stick" the city for every cent possible in work on the elevated line. The subsequent overcharges, Mr. Smith said, came to $700,000 to $800,000.

Mr. Pratt denied the charges. Representative William J. Green Jr., head of the Democratic organization here, pointed out that no "politicians" were involved. He praised city Controller Alexander Hemphill and District Attorney James C.

Crumlish Jr. "for bringing this whole mess out into the open."

Mr. Hemphill and Mr. Crumlish, with the endorsement of the organization, won Democratic nominations for election recently.

Commenting on the statement that no politicians were involved, Mr. Dilworth said "Green is just lucky—this time."

The mayor said "we have been too complacent and over-confident."

"Reform government is not dead. But we have made some serious mistakes," Mr. Dilworth said.

"For example," he declared, "we have not set up enough safeguards to guarantee that the Civil Service Commission and the Personnel Department resist some pretty sharp pressure from department heads, politicians and about a third of the City Council."

Referring to Philadelphia accomplishments since 1952, when Joseph S. Clark, now a United States Senator, took office as Philadelphia's first Democratic mayor of the century, Mr. Dilworth said:

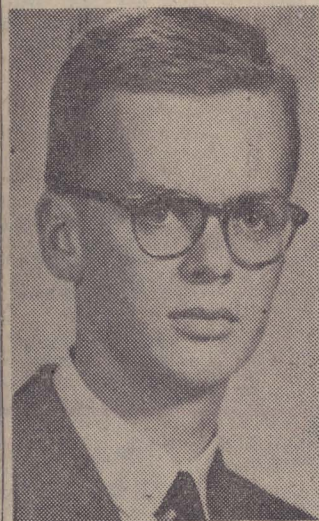

"I think the people of Philadelphia believe that their government has been good. But what we didn't appreciate is that a great many city improvement contracts create temptations—contracts go out so fast, and that means you have sharpies trying to get in on the situation."

"But I must say I was surprised at the level of city people who were reached in this current business."

St. John's Lutheran 'Son' Assistant Pastor

A son of the congregation, David B. Harned yesterday was called to be assistant pastor of St.

John's Evangelical Lutheran Church.

The call, authorized by a vote of the congregation at a special meeting after the worship service yesterday morning, is for a two-year term. The Rev. Arnold F. Keller Jr., pastor of the church, said much of his work will be in the field of Christian education.

Harned presently is teaching in the department of religion at Williams College, Williamstown, Mass. and is a candidate for his doctorate in theology at Yale. He will be ordained by the Lutheran Ministerium of Pennsylvania before he begins his pastoral duties here in July.

He frequently has assisted in the services at St. John's and on occasion has filled its pulpit.

The young churchman is a son of Mrs. Mary Baily Harned of 2826 Crest Ave., North, and the late William B. Harned. He was graduated from St. Andrew's School in Middletown, Del., in 1950 with highest honors and received his bachelor of arts degree from Yale University in 1954. The following year he studied at the University of Edinburgh and in 1957 he was graduated from the Yale Divinity School. He received his master of arts degree from Yale in 1959 and has taught at both Yale and Williams while meeting requirements for his doctor of theology degree.

He is a fellow of the National Council of Religion in Higher Education.

Before he begins his work in Allentown this summer, he will be married to Miss Elaine Paula Heydenreich, daughter of the Rev. and Mrs. Robert A. Heydenreich of Waterbury, Conn., and Northfield, Mass.

St. Andrew's School To Graduate 37 Saturday

Thirty-seven seniors, three of them Delawareans, will receive their diplomas from Mr. Robert A. Moss, Headmaster, when St. Andrew's holds its twenty-eighth commencement in the school auditorium at 11:00 a. m. Saturday, June 10th.

Over two hundred parents and friends of the school are expected to attend the exercises, at which Randolph Leigh Williams of Wilmington will make the valedictory for his class. Major General Howard McCrum Snyder, U. S. A., retired, will deliver the principal address, and The Right Reverend Arthur R. McKinstry, Retired Bishop of Delaware, will pronounce the Benediction.

The Headmaster's Award, which is presented annually to an alumnus who has rendered distinguished Christian service to his community, will be given in absentia to The Reverend Patterson Keller, '49, for the past five years a missionary priest at Huslia, Alaska. The award will be received by his father, The Reverend Christophe Keller of Easton, Maryland.

The Irene S. duPont Scholarship, which is given to a young scholar of great diligence and promise and carries with it a stipend sufficient to defray all school expenses during the recipient's term of residence, will be awarded Dale Alan Smith of Oceanport, New Jersey. Dale, a member of the Class of 1964, is the first to receive the award, which was established only this year by members of Mrs. duPont's family.

Major General Snyder, D. S. O., who is probably best known as former President Eisenhower's White House physician, was born at Cheyenne, Wyoming, in 1881, five years after the Little Big Horn. He began his Army career in 1907, two years after his graduation from Jefferson Medical College in Philadelphia. He retired in 1948, only to be recalled and assigned to service with S. H. A. P. E. in 1951. In 1953 he was appointed personal physician to former President Eisenhower, a post he held until 1961. The General's grandson, Howard McCrum Snyder, III, is an honors graduate of the Class of 1961.

Randolph Leigh Williams, who will deliver the valedictory, came to St. Andrew's as a second former in September 1956. Williams, who is the son of Mr. T. Leigh Williams of New Castle and Mrs. Louise A. C. Browning of Wilmington, has won academic honors in each of the five years he has been here and has made varsity letters in football, wrestling and crew. He will attend Harvard College in September.

The graduation exercises will be preceded by an early Corporate Communion for the Class of 1961. The service will be celebrated by

Just Like the Old Days

For 67 uninterrupted years, a powerful G.O.P. machine ruled Philadelphia—and stole it blind. Then, in 1951, a group of young, liberal Democratic reformers threw the Republican rascals out of office. During the next years, the last 5½ of them under Mayor Richardson Dilworth, the reformers, with their programs for slum clearance, improved park and recreation facilities, and road construction, made Philadelphia a model of municipal progress. But as of last week able, aggressive Dick Dilworth was fighting for his political life as his aging reform administration was swamped by scandal.

Blueblooded Watchdog. Strangely, the man who exposed the scandals was a fellow Democrat, a onetime protégé of Dilworth's and an official in his administration. Like the mayor, City Controller Alexander Hemphill, 40, is a well-heeled blueblood with an Ivy League background (University of Pennsylvania '43). The father of seven, he is the godfather of a Dilworth grandchild, and a fancier of Utrillo and Rouault prints. He also takes his watchdog job as city controller seriously—so seriously that when he decided to run for election in 1957, Dilworth tried to persuade him to withdraw. Says Hemphill: "I just told him to go to hell."

Hemphill's investigations of the city government's spending and ethical practices at first seemed to be digging up only small potatoes: a Dilworth appointee was discovered holding two jobs; municipal employees were seen at a race track when they were supposed to be at work; city truck drivers were caught selling city paint; a private citizen's driveway was paved at public expense. But Hemphill was a serious annoyance to Dilworth. "The crooks we can cope with," cried Dilworth. "But it is these pious phonies we can't handle."

But the scandals multiplied and grew bigger. Last winter Hemphill's auditors discovered that an automobile dealer had set up an elaborate shell game with a possible profit of $40,000 by selling new cars to the city, then buying back used cars at cut-rate prices after they had been conveniently "re-evaluated." Dilworth fired the officials involved in the deal, but he was still unimpressed by Hemphill's investigations. "It strikes me as a lot of penny-ante stuff," he said in April—and left town on a round-the-world trip. While Dilworth was gone, Hemphill kept digging. He struck pay dirt.

Payola & Whisky. Eli G. Travis, a free-spending contractor, admitted that he had lavished a small fortune on friendly city officials who helped him to get contracts and did not inspect his work too closely. On one big job—$1,000,000 worth of repairs for an elevated transit line—city officials claim that he successfully swindled the public out of $800,000. In his various deals with city officials, said Travis, he had "paid out at least $75,000 in payola." Travis testified that the chief of the Division of Architecture and Engineering and a former secretary had received $25,000. Another civil servant was rewarded with a gift of $4,000.

The city treasurer and two other officials accepted Christmas bottles of whisky, gaily gift-wrapped in $100 bills.

Last month, Mayor Dilworth hurried back to Philadelphia, ruthlessly fired every accused employee, no matter how lightly tainted. Three clerks were discharged for accepting $25 to $50 Christmas gifts. Last week, when Travis announced that he had given Public Property Commissioner William Gennetti a $50 golf bag, Gennetti denied the charge. Dilworth agreed that Gennetti was probably innocent, but accepted his resignation just the same and replaced him with a man who vowed to work without salary.

After Hemphill made his first big exposures, it seemed that nearly everybody in Philadelphia wanted to get into the act. The local press gleefully joined the chase, rocked the city with new revelations of corruption. The Republican Alliance, a G.O.P. reform group, hired three professional investigators to uncover more scandals. In court last week, Dilworth argued tearfully that there was no need for a grand jury investigation. The municipal government, he pleaded, could clean up its own messes. "We were lax," he admitted privately. "We got so wrapped up in pushing our programs that we just assumed our civil service was fine." But in the welter of scandal that surrounded him, there was reason to wonder whether Dilworth could survive politically. As a reformer at the head of a sullied reform administration, he may have to stifle his ambition to become Governor of Pennsylvania next year and settle for private life in Philadelphia's swank Society Hill.

Samuel J. West Dies in Car Crash

Samuel Johnson West, 19, eldest son of president and Mrs. Samuel E. West of Kemper Military School, was killed in an automobile accident near De Quincy, La., Friday afternoon while enroute from New Orleans, La., to Houston, Tex.

The Louisiana Highway Patrol stated that the wreck was unavoidable—that West, attempting to avoid a car coming toward him on the wrong side of the road—veered into an oncoming truck. The car at fault did not stop.

In trying to avoid the car, Mr. West lost control of his own car and skidded into the path of the truck. He was thrown from his car.

Leo Corley, 42, Arcadia, Fla., a passenger in the truck, was injured and taken to De Quincy hospital. Don Roan, Arcadia, Fla., the truck driver, and Donald A. Gunness, 19, a passenger in West's car, were not hurt. Police were looking for the woman driver who left the scene.

Samuel Johnson West was born in Wichita, Kan., Jan. 25, 1942, the son of Samuel E. West Jr. and Mary Cies West. He was a graduate of St. Andrews School in Middletown, Delaware and had recently completed his freshman year in the School of Engineering at the University of Missouri.

While at St. Andrews, he was an All-Star Delaware High school football player, having competed in the charity game at the University of Delaware for the benefit of Crippled children. Last summer, while in Boonville, he was a participant in Ban Johnson baseball. Sam had been working this summer for Pan American Petroleum Co. in New Orleans in the Seismograph Dept.

He is survived by his parents; two brothers, Michael and James, and two sisters, Lynn and Sarah. He also leaves his grandmothers, Mrs. Samuel E. West Sr. of Silver Spring, Maryland and Mrs. Herbert W. Cies of Columbus, Kan.

Funeral arrangements, in charge of the B. W. Thacher Funeral Home, will be announced later. The family will appreciate memorials to the Alumni Memorial Fund of St. Andrew's School.

The prospective bride graduated from St. Margaret's School, Waterbury, Conn., and Garland Junior College in Boston.

Repairs to Dam at Issue

Noxontown Lake Drains Steadily During Dispute

Noxontown Lake is steadily disappearing while a dispute rages over who should repair a leaking dam.

On Sept. 17 a car careened off Route 448, which passes over Noxontown dam, and damaged four of the dam's six wooden retaining gates.

The State Highway Department made immediate temporary repairs, but one of the gates is still leaking badly.

Warren S. P. Combs, Jr., a property owner on the lake, believes the water level has fallen three feet since the accident. He estimates that, barring rainfall or repairs, the lake will run dry in about two weeks.

ROBERT A. MOSS, headmaster at St. Andrews School, largest property owner on the lake, says the water level is the lowest he has seen it in his three years at the school.

In a spot where the water once was over the boys' heads when they went swimming, it now comes only to their waists, he says.

Yet no one seems sure just who owns the dam and who should be repairing it.

Complicating the issue is the fact that residents feel the road over the dam is dangerously narrow and should be widened.

The Highway Department feels its share in repairing the dam has been done.

RAYMOND E. Tomasetti, division engineer for New Castle County, said the Department made temporary emergency repairs after the accident to avoid undue "hardship" on the lakeside residents.

He was not sure whether the Department was responsible for maintaining the wooden dam structure, but he did feel that the "water level is not our primary concern and responsibility."

"There is no damage to the road if the water in the lake drops," he said. "From the standpoint of the road washing out, the New Castle Division is not too worried."

MRS. ROSITA ELLISON, a fourth generation descendant living on land her ancestors first settled in 1740, claims she owns the dam and says she has no intention of making immediate repairs.

Mrs. Ellison claims to own the dam, the lake bottom, and the water in the lake. She says she has been patching the dam over the years at her own expense, and that she has a deed proving her ownership.

In 1926, however, Judge Richard S. Rodney found that the "paper title to the bed of the pond is lost in obscurity." He mentioned the dam only in passing.

"I'M NOT concerned with the water level going down," Mrs. Ellison said yesterday. "It will be many months before I make any repairs."

"This is everybody's pond until a disaster strikes," she said, "and then nobody wants it."

There was still three feet of water in the center of the pond on Sunday, she said, and the fish are not yet in danger.

She said she does not intend to make repairs until she sees what action the state finally takes. She would be hard pressed to finance repairs, she said, and if the state should subsequently decide to widen the road she would have just thrown money down the drain.

There is little hope of getting the driver of the car to pay for repairs, she added, since he carried no liability insurance.

COMBS SAID he was forming a citizens group to force corrective action. "Norman Wilder is always talking about the damage Shell Oil is going to do, and here we have a natural resource which has been with us 300 years just going to pot," he said.

Combs said he would ask the highway department to put in a wider and safer causeway and would see that someone put in a dam "of the proper height and construction."

Charles W. Stockly, another lakeside property owner, feared the lake would turn into a mud flat and the fish would be lost.

"TO BE HONEST with you I don't know who is responsible for the dam, whether it's the State, or Mrs. Ellison, or others," he said. "But those who are responsible should maintain it. If it should be determined that all the interested property owners are responsible, I would feel obligated to pay my share."

Moss expressed concern at the disappearance of the lake because of its recreational and scenic value to St. Andrews.

"The school believes that some sort of efforts should be made to repair the dam and ensure a constant water level in the lake," he said.

U.S. Ideas to Bring in Tourists Have a Severe Testing in Paris

Team of Inviting Americans Encounters Challenging Questions, Such as on Language, by Travel Agents

PARIS, Oct. 6.—The program, charge of the visa section of to encourage Europeans to visit the United States ran into some heavy seas today before a group of polite, but practical Parisian travel agents.

An American travel team including, among others, a cowboy from Paris, Texas; two United States forest rangers, two representatives of the United States Immigration and Naturalization Service, a customs inspector and a beauty queen whose title is "Miss Visit the United States," appeared before the travel agents at a meeting that had been arranged for the team. "Howdy," the cowboy said, "Howdy." The forest rangers showed colored slides of the national forests.

The representatives of the Immigration and Naturalization Service explained that the age of automation meant that one could now get a visitor's visa for the United States in twenty minutes.

The customs inspector said that, under a new law, visitors could now bring in $100 worth of new merchandise duty free as gifts for their American friends.

Speed on Visas
John E. Wason, who represents the newly-created United States Travel Service in Paris, said that his office would soon be open to provide travel agents with all kinds of information about the United States. The beauty queen smiled.

Then a French travel agent rose and asked if, in a bus traveling through the middle West, for example, a hostess could not be put aboard who would be able to speak a language other than English.

"After all," he said, "it is not easy to be in the middle of a strange country and not be able to talk to anyone."

"As you know," an American bus line official replied, "running a bus is an economy operation aimed at bringing fares down. We've tried hostesses, but that adds to costs. Right now we've got recording tapes that the bus driver can put on describing the scenery. But they're in English. We probably could do a tape in some other language."

"Try and ask a tape a question," one of the French agents commented.

A question arose about a Frenchman from a country town who had to bring his whole family to Paris and stay for a couple of days to get visa. Would it not be possible for the travel agent to save the man this considerable trouble by getting the visa for him?

Leader of Junior League In Brooklyn Is Kept Busy

Mrs. Phelan Devotes Time to Children and Charities

By LILLIAN BELLISON

What seemed so strange to Mrs. Daniel B. Phelan was that in this country "you would pay an organization so that you could go out and work for nothing."

That was in 1953 when she and her husband, a vice president of the Manufacturers Hanover Trust Company, moved to Brooklyn and she became a member of the Junior League there. Now she is president of the league.

Mrs. Phelan could recall no such organized volunteer effort in Europe, where she was born in Paris and went to school in Switzerland, or even in Argentina, where she lived before settling in New York.

Three years ago the Phelans moved into the brownstone house at 165 Clinton Street where Mr. Phelan's father, the late Dr. George W. Phelan, had his office and home. The house is in the Brooklyn Heights section where the Brooklyn Junior League is having a "Holiday House" tour of five homes Tuesday afternoon to raise funds for its community trust account.

Father Is Oil Executive

Mrs. Phelan's home might well be on the league's next tour. The living room alone would tell all about her. On the floor is an exquisite Persian rug, a gift from her father, Abdullah Entezam of Teheran, head of the National Iranian Oil Company.

On a low table in front of the radiator between the room's two large windows is a tray holding a soup tureen, small onion soup pots, flower pots and dainty cups filled with bulbs, "all to be daffodils by Christmas." The bulbs are from a friend of her mother's in Virginia.

Mrs. Phelan's mother, the former Miss Margaret Hume of Washington, now is Mrs. Harold Horan of Caracas, Venezuela, where her husband heads the American Chamber of Commerce.

On the wall over the radiator hangs a large black-and-white photograph of Mr. and Mrs. Phelan taken as they knelt before the altar of the Lady Chapel of St. Patrick's Cathedral at their marriage in 1947.

Over the fireplace hangs an Indonesian tapestry of two herons in flight, a souvenir of her husband's Army service in World War II. He returned to active duty in the Korean conflict as an instructor in the Intelligence Corps at Fort Riley, Kan., where their oldest child, Hume, was born nine years ago.

"That's the best thing that ever happened to us. He was born for $7.75," Mrs. Phelan said with a laugh.

Two floors above the living room the other three Phelan children were hard at play. They are Alexander, almost 6, Christopher, nearly 5, and 4-year-old Leyla, named for Mrs. Phelan.

A devoted mother and good cook, Mrs. Phelan spends what's left of her time working for causes on whose boards she represents the Junior League. Dear to her heart is the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, where she started her Junior League work as a provisional member because she could speak Spanish with the Puerto Rican families in Brooklyn.

Pink and White Complexion

To hear her speak English, one might think she had lived in New York all her life with a trace of the better girl's schools in her accent. And to look at her blue eyes, delicate features and pink and white complexion, one might mark her as from northern Europe and not the Middle East.

As for her shiny, dark-brown hair drawn back softly into a French twist, Mrs. Phelan intends to wear it just that way when she joins her Junior League sisters as models for the House of Worth fashion show planned by the Brooklyn Museum for next May.

Last winter the museum lent the league costumes for its Golden Anniversary Ball. And now the league is returning the favor by lending its members.

Business in Brief

State's New Aviation Firm Puts '62 Planes on Exhibit

By EUGENE R. KNOBLAUCH

Staff Business Writer

The state's newest aviation business, Summit Aviation Inc., at Baker's Field on U.S. Route 301, south of Summit Bridge, has received its first 1962 model planes for exhibit.

Summit Aviation, devoted to the interests of private fliers and those who operate planes for fast, convenient business travel, holds the Cessna aircraft franchise for the Delaware Peninsula and nearby sections of Maryland and Virginia.

SIX MODELS OF the 1962 Cessna are now available, according to Summit's president, Richard C. du Pont Jr. There will be four more models out in January and three more in February to mark Cessna's celebration of its 50 years in aviation.

At Baker's Field, Summit has built up a stock of Cessna planes, including the latest models and some built as far back as 1949.

Mrs. Irene du Pont, 84, Dies at Granogue

By WALTER E. F. SMITH
Mrs. Irene Sophie du Pont, 84, wife of Irene du Pont, died at her home in Granogue early last night after an extended illness.

She was a major benefactor of the Diocese of Delaware of the Episcopal Church, and of national projects of that church, various educational institutions, and of the blind citizens of Delaware.

MRS. DU PONT shunned publicity, especially about her numerous benefactions, preferring to do her good deeds quietly. However, her generosity to dozens of good causes and many institutions through a long period of years, earned her the gratitude of thousands of persons.

St. Andrew's School, Middletown; and the Episcopal Church's National Cathedral in Washington, D.C., had been among her major interests for many years.

The Delaware Commission for the Blind elected her to honorary life chairmanship 11 years ago as a mark of tribute and affection for her more than 30 years' service as its active chairman.

MRS. DU PONT planned and established Camp Landis, near Centerville, where two weeks' free vacation is guaranteed to every blind citizen of this state.

Another of her benefactions is a new Irene S. du Pont Library, now under construction for Sunny Hills School and Sanford Preparatory School, near Hockessin, which will cost about $200,000, most of the cost of which is a gift of Mrs. du Pont. This building will also contain an auditorium, and is expected to be ready for use by the early fall of 1962.

A few years ago her gift of $50,000 made possible the construction on a new $115,000 St. James' Episcopal Church in Newport. Six years ago the Irene S. du Pont Library at St. Andrew's School, Middletown, which her gifts made possible, was dedicated.

MRS. DU PONT was also actively interested for many years in work for dependent children in Delaware, and had been a member of the Delaware League for Planned Parenthood, representing it a few years ago in the Chesapeake Area Planned Parenthood Council.

Another of Mrs. du Pont's many interests was art. She gave a fine mural to St. Andrew's School about 23 years ago. It was 30 feet by 10 feet, and was done by the late Chadds Ford artist, N. C. Wyeth. It was entitled "The Builders of St. Andrew's," and was a dramatically presented portrait group of the 10 original trustees of the school, of whom her brother, the late A. Felix du Pont, founder of the school, was one.

She was a member of the board of directors of the Wilmington Society of the Fine Arts, having been active in the society for many years until recently when she was named an honorary director.

MUSIC WAS another of her interests. Mrs. du Pont was an honorary director of the Wilmington Music School, and for many years was one of the supporters of the concerts of the American Society of Ancient Instruments.

Mrs. du Pont was the daughter of the late Francis Gurney du Pont of Wilmington and Elise Wigfall Simons of Charleston, S.C.

Mrs. Du Pont was born April 17, 1877, in "Hagley," a home close to Christ Episcopal Church, Greenville.

SURVIVING her, in addition to her husband, are one son, Irene du Pont Jr.; seven daughters, Mrs. Ernest N. May, Mrs. Crawford H. Greenewalt, Mrs. Colgate Darden of Norfolk, Va.; Mrs. Philip G. Rust of Thomasville, Ga.; Mrs. Henry H. Silliman, Mrs. J. Bruce Bredin, and Mrs. Robert B. Flint, all of Greenville.

Funeral services will be held tomorrow at 2 p.m. in the Episcopal Cathedral Church of St. John, Concord Avenue and Market Street. Interment will be in the Du Pont Family Cemetery adjoining Christ Church, Greenville. The family requests that flowers be omitted.

Pond Dam Repairs Plug Up Area Fears

Relieved lakeside residents have expressed thanks to Mrs. William Y. Ellison, owner and now restorer of the Noxontown Dam.

MRS. ELLISON SAID she made repairs on the dam as a "business venture" and not as a "philanthropic" enterprise. She profits from fishermen who use the lake and said she did not think fishing next year had been harmed. Trouble started at the pond on Sept. 17, when a car careened off the road passing over the dam and damaged four of the six wooden retaining gates.

Water leaked out rapidly. The State Highway Department, although disclaiming responsibility, made repairs which reduced, but did not halt, the flow of water.

FISHERMEN AND LAKESIDE property owners became concerned that the pond would disappear.

Mrs. Ellison said she owned the dam, but that she had no intention of making immediate repairs. She said she would be hard-pressed to finance repairs, and that if the state subsequently decided to widen the roadway and bridge, against which the dam gates are placed, she would have just thrown money away.

The highway department said its responsibility was limited to maintaining the road and guard rail, not the dam.

SEVERAL PROPERTY owners offered to share the cost of repairs if it could be determined that they were responsible.

But some two months went by and nothing happened—except that the water level fell lower and lower. Robert A. Moss, headmaster at St. Andrews School, which is situated on the lake, said that at one point his crew dock was left dry.

Warren S. P. Combs Jr., a property owner on the lake, said the level dropped at his dock.

Late last month, however, the tide turned. Property owners were dismayed to see the level drop sharply, but they traced the cause to Leonard and Melvin Wallace, carpenters who were restoring the dam. The carpenters replaced the old gates and added a cement foundation and a wooden platform in front of the dam.

THE REPAIRS WERE financed by Mrs. Ellison and her daughter. Mrs. Ellison said the cost was nothing like the $25,000 reconstruction job advocated by the highway department.

The St. Andrews student body passed a resolution thanking Mrs. Ellison and the school paper also carried an article of thanks.

At Air Base

Naming of Building For War Hero Urged

From the News-Journal Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON—Rep. Harris B. McDowell Jr., D-Del., has urged the Air Force to name a major building at Dover Air Force Base in honor of Delaware World War II air hero Maj. George S. Welch.

McDowell suggested that the base hospital or the dependents' school would be suitable for the designation.

The congressman earlier had written to Air Force Secretary Eugene Zuckert urging him to name the entire base in honor of Welch, one of the most decorated U.S. pilots of World War II.

Zuckert replied, however, that only pilots who died on active duty or full retirement status can be considered in naming air bases.

Welch was killed in 1954 working as chief engineering test pilot for North American Aviation Inc. He was test diving a prototype of the F-100 Super Sabre jet fighter.

Welch received his first medals for valor when he was one of the few American pilots able to counterattack against Japanese aircraft at Pearl Harbor in 1941.

During the war, he won the Distinguished Service Cross, the Silver Star, the Distinguished Flying Cross, and nine other decorations.

'Giants' Opens At Cricket

By NORMAN NADEL.
MOST MUSICAL COMEDIES have only one intermission. "All Kinds of Giants," which opened last night at the Cricket Theater, has two.

So much for extravagant praise. On the debit side, this self-consciously whimsical little effort manages to hint at an entertainment potential without ever achieving it. It does, however, have an effect on the man (or, presumably, the woman or child) in the audience. It makes him want passionately to get up on stage and fix things. The opportunities for play-doctoring, at the professional or even amateur level, are almost endless.

By way of background, composer Sam Pottle and playwright-lyricist Tom Whedon began doing musical comedy at school—together at Phillips Exeter; individually at Yale (Sam) and Harvard (Tom). Tom presently is a staff writer for Captain Kangaroo, a television program.

Both have other and perhaps more impressive achievements, but the above seem significant. There is something of Captain Kangaroo out of Yale-Harvard-Phillips Exeter in "All Kinds of Giants," with Captain Kangaroo holding the edge. Possible future courses are either to polish the show up for an adult audience, or polish it up in a slightly different way, for children.

The playbook is based on a familiar fairy tale, "Seven at One Blow," about a tailor who swats seven flies at one swoop, thereby earning a misleading reputation as a mighty fighter, also the hand of the princess.

In the version at the Cricket, he also discovers something unusual about the giant he is supposed to kill, and I will not betray man, beast, children or the producers by giving this away. It happens to be the sole segment of the play that clicks; so let's keep that minuscule segment of suspense unsullied.

A cheer is in order for Bill Hinnant, as the giant, who arrives about mid-evening to hypo the sagging show. I have seen Hamlet played with less probing penetration of the role.

Only he and Richard Morse (the tailor) avoid mugging, or otherwise belaboring their comedy. Still, Clairborne Cary is a fetching little princess, Ralph Purdum imparts a Mack Sennett touch to the king, and Tom Rummier is suitably nasty as the prince. Some of Whedon's dialogue hampers all of them.

One gets the impression that everyone in this show is capable of better work, certainly including director Peter Conlow. As just one example, one or two of Pottle's songs, and the piano-percussion setting for several of them, imply that this man could turn out a fresh and exciting musical score. I hope that he soon will. Not incidentally, the instrumental performance by pianist Milton Setzer and percussionist Joseph Adato is tops.

The clever touches in Whedon's dialogue (sprinkled amongst the corn) indicate that he, too, could write a sparkling playbook. "All Kinds of Giants," however, isn't it.

Theatre: A Musical Fairy Tale Opens

'All Kinds of Giants' in Debut at Cricket

By LEWIS FUNKE

ANYBODY in the mood for one of those grown-up musical fairy tales? A sample of the category opened last night at the Cricket Theatre. It is called "All Kinds of Giants" and it is all about a sort of dotty king whose realm is being terrorized by a giant in the near-by forest. This king fellow, naturally worried about the loss of the tourist trade and the declining state of the national exchequer, is ready to give anything, even the hand of his daughter in marriage, to the chap who can rid the place of the pest.

The daughter, of course, is in love with Sam the court tailor who, as every lover of fairy tales knows by now, just doesn't have royal blood and hence is most definitely not eligible to participate in the giant-killing sweepstakes. (Social significance here about the common man daring to mingle with the upper classes).

Meanwhile, there is that prince from Russia who can do anything—anyway that's what he says, and every lover of fairy tales knows that this Russian can't win that girl's hand so about mid-way through it is possible to relax a bit. And, as expected Sam the tailor, by some strange shenanigans (and moral: resolve to be yourself) manages to put the needle into both the king and the Russian—and the princess is his.

Responsible for this excursion into never-never land is Tom Whedon who also wrote the lyrics for the tunes composed by Sam Pottle. The responsibility need not rest too heavily on Mr. Whedon's brow, nor, for that matter on that of his accomplice. The score and the lyrics are among the brighter elements of an occasionally clever, oc-

ALL KINDS OF GIANTS, a musical. Book and lyrics by Tom Whedon. Music by Sam Pottle. asionally tedious escapade. "My Prince," "Paint Me a Rainbow," and "My Star" are melodious ballads. "Friends," "Logic!" "Here Are We" and "To Be a King" are gay, humorous songs with lyrics of quality and intelligence.

Also among the more felicitous aspects of the musical are its performers, each of whom obviously believes in fairy tales and, under Peter Conlow's frequently inventive direction, surmount even the heavy going of the story's unfolding. The book, true enough to the fairy-tale notion, is too often also true to the dullness of same, and hardly aided by some rather ordinary dialogue. Indeed, at about the point where this fairy tale seemed ready to get lost in its own forest, there came relief in the person of the giant, a 5 foot 4 inch or thereabout blond comedian named Bill Hinnant.

Mr. Hinnant, consigned to being a giant because both his father and his father's father also were giants, is no more happy about his business than the doctor who really wanted to be a plumber or the other way around. His eyes blinking in sad confession, a look of puzzlement frequently crossing his countenance, Mr. Hinnant has some qualities reminiscent of Nancy Walker. Even the occasional angle of his head and the thrust of his jaw are reminders. He is a valuable asset, being especially effective in a demonstration of the old vaudevillian's soft shoe routine when he is at court as a knight (anything can happen in a fairy tale).

Claiborne Cary Is Seen in Role of Princess

Claiborne Cary, as the unwilling princess is pleasant, and has a nice way of some times going just a little bit realistic in the tone of her voice to remind you of, say, Audrey Christie. Ralph Purdum is an amusingly foolish king, and Richard Morse, as the tailor, gives an energetic and entirely winning portrayal. Tom Rummier communicates the haughtiness of his Russian prince as well as his silliness.

Merrill Sindler has put the tiny stage of the Cricket to good use. He has designed revolving boxes, tall affairs that swivel from being the windows of the palace courtyard to being the throne room to being the tailor's shop. The shifting of the scenes is smooth and the ingenuity admirable. Mr. Sindler's costumes are all right, too. Indeed, altogether there is a lot that is all right about "All Kinds of Giants" balanced by a good deal that is not. Nor is it entirely possible to forget that there once was another musical fairy tale off Broadway called "Once Upon a Mattress." In that one there also was a dotty king et al. It was better.

FIRST NIGHT REPORT 'All Kinds of Giants'

CRICKET THEATER
Second Ave. and Tenth St.

A new musical in three acts with book and lyrics by Tom Whedon, music by Sam Pottle, staged and directed by Peter Conlow, sets and costumes by Merrill Sindler, lighting by Pat Simmons, musical direction by Milton Setzer, presented by Noel Weiss with the following cast:

A King..... Ralph Purdum
A Princess..... Clairborne Cary
A Tailor..... Richard Morse
A Prince..... Tom Rummier
The Giant..... Bill Hinnant

By Walter Kerr

THERE is a good bit of talent skittering around loose in "All Kinds of Giants," and if the whole capering joke finally skitters right out the window it is because nobody—but nobody—will play straight man. The book is fey, and once in a while funny. The lyrics are fey, and very often funny. The performing is fey, and the cuteness is piling up now. The staging is fey, and that's it. One heavy, sodden mind on the premises might have nailed the evening down. Might have, I said. There's an awful lot of helium to get hold of.

Consider the basic conceit: a giant has invaded a twelfth-century kingdom, destroying real estate values right and left. The king, distressed at the way in which the national "image" is being damaged, makes "an amazing free offer." He will give his daughter's hand in marriage to the fellow who routs out the giant, provided that said fellow is well-born ("his inbred blood must be blue"). Naturally, there is no hope for the ordinary little tailor out of Hans Christian Andersen (it should always be remembered that Hans Christian Andersen was essentially a sober man) who loves the Princess dearly and would gladly do battle for her.

Now this sort of thing, with nisms, can be fun if it doesn't insist too much. It is fun, right now, when it marches tremulously into the forest to meet its giant. The giant, as luck and libretto would have it, is about five feet high, became a giant only because his father insisted upon it, and is suffering from a very bad cold ("it's sleeping in all those lairs," he complains). In a genuinely delightful title song, he informs his captor that there are all kinds of giants and he just happens to be a small one.

The production is particularly in clover in having found a sort of Dead End version of Peter Pan to play this unhappy role. His name is Bill Hinnant, he is splendidly forlorn ("You show me a giant, and I'll show you a lonely man"), and when he is waltz-clogging about like a corrupt Mickey Mouse the entertainment is airborne and looks good that way.

divine right is divine." As a librettist, Mr. Whedon seems to become absolutely paralyzed when it is time to write an exit-line, and Mr. Purdum somehow or other seems to get them all. There are vast vacant spaces pretty frequently between songs, and they are not wonderfully filled by having our testy monarch back directly and conveniently into Mr. Morse's unsheathed sword. In short, "All kinds of Giants" is too cute by two-thirds.

Nevertheless, there is some promise here. As the actors suggest in one of their songs, you can have a "hi, nonny, nonny, and a low, nonny, nonny." The authors should practise the low notes.

Thanks pleasantly, too, when blonde, stubborn Clairborne Cary folds her hands plaintively, sighs at the thought of the nobleman she is expected to marry, and takes a piece out of Walt Disney's hide. ("Some day my Prince will come," she sings, "and I'll be miserable"). She is also very nice as she says "I'm pensive," as though she had found the word in a story book and thought how well it suited her.

Add four or five brightly-rhymed lyrics by Tom Whedon (particularly "Suddenly Stop and Think" and "Be Yourself") plus a pleasantly tinkly score by Sam Pottle, and you've got the beginnings of the makings of a spoof. Unfortunately, Mr. Whedon's book and Peter Conlow's staging won't let light enough alone. The whimsy blows like a gale through the castle corridors.

Thus every line that is sung or spoken must be decked out with fidgety, fragmentary, slipper-kicking business so that sixty-five half-steps are required to get from here to there (the Cricket stage is already so small that here and there are practically bedfellows). The bouncing about is hard on an able young actor, Richard Morse, who is effective whenever he is doing anything deliberately (such as miming a bit of sewing or slinging a bag over his shoulder in slow-motion) but who is not primarily a clown and is made to seem merely energetic under the burden of so much capering.

And the relentless insouciance of the book weighs most heavily, I think, on Ralph Purdum, the King who thinks "the theory of

W. Lewis Fleming

There was an essence of the sun in his smile. There was his walk too, a confident joyful bounce. There was also the twinkle in his eyes and a sunny tone in his voice. He spared no one a smile and a nod. We saw this in Mr. Fleming. Who could not forget those memorable study halls of his. Arms laden with books, papers, and that mysterious battered black case with the strap, he would walk into study hall with his sailor's gait and flash a grin. One pocket bulging with his "petites chocolates", he would then retrieve the remains of a cup of coffee from his office. Study hall would begin with his synchronizing his pocket watch, which he would adjust and then snap shut with satisfaction.

Those in his classes can remember the drills upon drills, the pools of sweat underneath chairs, and the familiar "C'est a dire." His classes studied hard and learned well.

The present forms remember but these last few years. Only a few of the members remember his basketball teams and the battered fedora that didn't survive his last season as a coach.

Mr. Fleming himself, was quite an athlete. He attended Richmond Academy, a day school somewhat smaller than S.A.S., during the war years. Unhappily, the war drew away most of Richmond Academy's teachers and "Lukey" never completed his final year but went off to Hampden Sydney College at the age of fifteen. For four years at Hampden Sydney he quarterbacked the varsity football team with the same drive and hard work that characterized him as a teacher. At the age of fifteen he was perhaps the youngest college quarterback ever to step out on a gridiron. In between varsity football and basketball, studies, and his extracurricular activities he blew a smooth sax, strummed the mandolin, and played the piano with a group of avid but amateur musicians. At eighteen Mr. Fleming graduated with a fine record and a bachelor's degree. From that point on he drove tirelessly up the ladder, smiling all the way and always, always busy. In a year at the University of Virginia he quarterbacked the freshman football team and acquired a Master of Arts.

From George Washington University for a year of graduate work in Old French, to Columbia University for work on his Ph.D. in Philology—a study involving the origins and roots of modern languages —, to a summer at the Sorbonne, he labored on. If anyone has ever claimed the distinction of being an educated man, Mr. Fleming could have claimed that. And yet he was too fine a gentleman, too modest a person to make any claims. But there again, though he never wore his laurels, he distinguished himself because of his personable, kindly nature.

It was at Episcopal High School in Alexandria, Virginia, where Mr. Fleming was head of the French department, that he first heard of the new school on the shores of the Noxontown. Mr. Bill Cameron had gone on to this new institution from EHS and urged his newly-married friend to apply for a position, probably in hopes that Mr. Fleming would bring up a little Southern sun with him to warm up the cold Delaware winters. Mr. Fleming arrived in the summer of '37 and true to form he brought with him the warmth and easy grace that could put life into the most austere place.

MR. FLEMING

He settled in at St. Andrew's and in 1939 turned out his first "Fleming Grammaire", page by page, on a hand-operated machine. In the winter months he coached rip-roaring basketball squads, one of which in 1945 won the Inter-Academic Conference basketball crown. His games were memorable moments and his antics rivaled those of "Bones" McKinney of Wake Forest. There was in particular one old fedora that endured several seasons' stomplings, poundings, and squashings but finally succumbed to the years and was clandestinely done away with by Mrs. Fleming after the last season.

Though he had finished coaching, Mr. Fleming remained an avid spectator, attending S.A.S. struggles at home and away. Saturdays and Sundays he would sit with the weekend's work in front of the T.V. and take in the action.

By publishing his version of an earlier abridgement of Les Jumeaux de L'Hotel Corneille by Edmond About, he pioneered in a new method of teaching French, that of having a class run entirely in French with French definitions. Third and fourth year French students know this system well as they have spent a period or two each week working with Les Jumeaux — entirely in French. Mr. Fleming kept the publishing of his work a secret. Only until the time of the graduation of last year's class was Mr. Moss free to release this news — Mr. Fleming had been that modest.

Unfortunately for him and all of us, he died before seeing his book in its published form. And with Mr. Fleming the Southern sun left us also. The buildings once more have cloaked themselves in austerity. It's hard to believe that his grin, his nod, his very presence made that great a difference. Sadly enough, the easy grace and warmth is gone, but we who remember can be thankful that we knew him.

Warner Lewis Fleming

The sudden death of Warner Lewis Fleming on December 19th of last year left all who had known him bereaved beyond the usual sense of the word. No tribute to his memory can fully express the feelings of respect and affection that have been conveyed by the literally hundreds of letters that Mrs. Fleming has received from alumni. However we feel that the following three documents manage to catch, each in its own way, some of the aspects of Lukey Fleming that made him the man he was to the faculty, the boys, and the alumni. The first is a reminiscence by William H. Cameron; the second, a reprint of an editorial from the CARDINAL by a student editorialist, Marshall Craig, '62; and the third, an alumni resolution accompanied by some comment by President Henry Herndon, '48, of the Alumni Association.

Teacher at this School, 1937-1961

When you have known a man for thirty-two years and when you have seen a man daily for twenty-five of the thirty-two, his departure is hard to accept. The fact is there and you know it. But the reality is something else again. Walk down the corridors and you expect to see him. Sit at a meeting and you wait to begin. You wait for the man with the bundle of books, the sheaf of papers in neat little packets each with its neat rubber band, the sharp pencils, the little cards — each of a size to fit in a vest pocket, each covered with notes hastily but certainly transferred from a paper which somehow seemed much more important than the business at hand — until he looked up and spoke and you knew that here was someone who, like a juggler, could do two things at once and do them well — and who never stopped doing them.

You can't erase the image. It's like closing the eyes against the sun. Shutting the lid may shut out the sun but the image stays for all of that — the tip-tilted hat, the snap, the jauntiness, the perpetual motion, the intensity, the go. The man was a competitor. He wanted to win. He worked — how he worked! — to win.

He faced the School in that spirit, and it was good for us — sometimes disconcerting but good. I never sat under him. I taught with him, but that's not the same thing. Old boys speak of pools of sweat — cold sweat. To the man behind the desk, the man armed with a phenomenal memory and little cards covered with meticulous notes and sharp eyes behind clear glasses, the enemy dragon sitting in front of him was not a boy but a boy's ignorance. The man intended to win. And he did. No man ever labored harder and to better effect and with his students than W.L.F. He wrote his own text. He master-minded language labs. He gathered, annotated and administered the foreign language reading library. He made word lists. His organization of his department was meticulous, thoughtful and imaginative. Perhaps only a teacher can understand what it means, in terms of time and devotion, to do these things and do them as well as W.L.F. did.

An Alumnus knows only the result. "Gone! I can't believe it. I'd sooner have faced Hell than come to his class unprepared. Those pools of sweat! But he taught me more in one year than I'll learn in two in college." "How's my French? It's easy — too easy sometimes." "Why did I major in French? I liked it, I guess. Besides, I knew it." There were exceptions. There always are. But they were few. "I knew it" or "I liked it" or "I learned" it were the rule. And it was no "pen of my uncle's brother" or "knife of my sister's aunt" French that a boy came away with. It was a French that worked. It was meant to.

W.L.F. was more than a teacher; he was a school master too. He and the Class of '46 brought us the honor system. As disciplinarian he was marked by leniency for the errant and chains for the mean. Because he worked so hard himself he felt the grind had its limits, that a boy needed "out" once in awhile. That St. Andrew's is liberal as it is with week ends and Saturday leaves is pretty much his doing. As an advisor he was quick to encourage and fierce in defense, but the laggard felt the spur. He had many talents. He was a musician. He could play almost anything short of a variety. He f-key tenor side of the s and word veat. worked at it. He was say.

Alumni Resolution

At the last meeting of the Alumni Council on February 16th, the following resolution was adopted:

"RESOLVED that the Alumni Association wishes to express its deepest sympathy to Pat Fleming over the loss of her husband. He was teacher, guardian and friend to us all. It is the hope of the Association that Pat will, if it comports with her wishes, continue as our able and devoted 'Secretary to the Alumni'."

The words seem terse and cold against the white paper, but no words can adequately describe the breadth and magnitude of Lukey Fleming. He was, no doubt, something different to each who knew him. But to all of us, he provided the finest example of Christian conduct, for he gave fully and without reservation of himself—not to satisfy himself but to instill in each of us a disciplined mind and a moral fiber.

In a time when compromise with right thought and conduct is all too frequently the order of the day, we can at the very least seek to practice his teaching. Perhaps in some small way, this will provide a measure of our feeling toward Lukey and be, I suspect, the highest tribute to his memory.

Swenson: A Man Of Fighting Spirit

A MIAMI banker whose driving energy made it possible for a "dead horse" to come alive is Dade County's "Outstanding Man of the Year."

His name is Edward F. Swenson, Jr., a fellow, who like most of the residents of this area, adopted Miami because he enjoys living here.

He's not a fire-ball in the sense of a high-pressure salesman. He is more the earnest type—a fellow who quietly sells his product and himself without seeming to press his point.

Swenson, a bespectacled, sports-loving man, was accorded the high honor of "Outstanding Man" by a three-man panel of newspaper-television judges for the Sholem Lodge of B'nai B'rith. His selection is based on community service—ininstalling new life into the United Fund drive last year.

THE United Fund was in the "dead horse" category after fizzling out far short of its goals in 1960. Civic leaders were discouraged.

That's when they turned to Swenson, a senior vice president of the First National Bank of Miami and a fellow who never will admit to being licked.

Some of this fighting spirit may go back to his Army days and to the Battle of the Bulge. He had enlisted in 1943, faking his way into the service despite an eye-sight defect which could have left him on the sidelines.

He started as a private, worked his way up to captain and served as a combat infantry rifle platoon leader with the 75th Division from the Ardennes Forest of Belgium until Hitler's armies called it quits on the banks of the Elbe River. "But don't write about my military service," he told a Herald newsman. "I got there when the war was almost over. I just went up to the front as a replacement."

He sure did. A major portion of his outfit was wiped out during the Bulge fighting.

SWENSON is that kind of a

Edward Swenson
... never say die

guy. He modestly disclaims credit for the United Fund success, saying that it was a team effort. "We were successful because the public awakened to the need of federated fund-raising ... to help needy causes."

He is a native New Yorker and a Floridian by choice.

He came down here courtin' some 20 years ago. The girl he later married, Marie Bassett, lived with her family in Palm Beach during the winter. "I liked what I saw — both Marie and Florida," he recalls. "So, here I am."

After graduating from Yale and then taking a business administration course at New York University, Swenson became a rookie investment banker in Wall Street. Then he went to war. Later, while serving as president of the Investment Association of New York in 1951, opportunity knocked.

He was offered a job as trust investment officer at First National Bank in Miami. He's still here—but in a higher position.

The Swensons have two children, Katherine, who is a student at Smith College, and Edward, III, who is attending boarding school in Connecticut. Mrs. Swenson is president of Everglades School for Girls here and Ed is trustee and on the board. The Swensons, as strong believers in independent education, founded the school.

Pierpoint, a 1940 graduate of the school, was hailed by Robert A. Moss, headmaster, as an alumnus who has rendered distinguished Christian service to his community.

James C. Beverley of Coral Gables, Fla., headed the list of 31 graduates. He delivered the valedictory address and received the Sherman Webb History Prize.

THREE AWARDS went to Richard S. Steele: the Founder's Medal, the St. Andrew's Cross and the Mamo Prize for wrestling.

We welcome Robert Robinson to the local news scene. He is the younger son of Mr. and Mrs. J. Thomas Robinson, of the Sussex Countian, the grandson of the late Robert G. Houston who published the Countian for many years. He's starting work as a reporter, which is, of course, the sensible way to begin.

Many of the people of the county have complained that their talented young people have gone off to greener pastures when it came time for a career, but here we have the reverse.

Young Robinson, a graduate of the University of North Carolina, has been all over the world with the U.S. Navy. But now he is settling down in home port.

The job of a weekly newspaperman is exactly what he makes of it. Some of our county journalists are leading personalities in their communities and others are pussy-footing along in neutral paths and nobody cares one way or another how they feel about things.

There have been many changes in the weekly newspapers in the past 10 years and we hope young Robinson's decision to join the family enterprise of his mother, Mrs. Mary Houston Robinson, will start a rejuvenation of them all.

Rosalie Smithy Marries Mr. John N. McIntosh

Miss Rosalie McCormick Smithy, a daughter of Mrs. William Watts Ball Jr. of 14 Water St., and the late Dr. Horace Gilbert Smithy, and Mr. John Nash McIntosh, a son of Mr. and Mrs. Olin Talley McIntosh Jr. of Hilton Head Island, were married yesterday in St. Michael's Episcopal Church.

The Rev. Richard C. Fell officiated at the ceremony.

The bride was given in marriage by her stepfather. She wore a gown of white veiled silk organza over taffeta; the bou-fant sheath had organza motifs appliqued throughout and the cathedral train was of veiled silk organza over taffeta. Her veil of silk illusion was attached to a cap of organza motifs and she carried a bouquet of lilies of the valley, centered with phalaenopsis.

Miss Sara Calhoun Smithy was her sister's maid of honor. Attendants were Mrs. Edward Ziegler of Ossining, N. Y., a sister of the bridegroom; Miss Harriet Rogers of Laurinburg, N. C., a cousin of the bride; Mrs.

Joseph C. Henderson of San Francisco and Mrs. Robert A. Richards.

Mr. McIntosh was his son's best man. Ushers were Mr. Francis McDonald Oliver of Savannah, Mr. Abel Lineberger Brand of Wilmington, N. C., Mr. Braxton Bragg Comer III and Mr. Edgar Pomeroy Williams III, both of Savannah, and Mr. Robert Cornelius McCormack of Greenwich, Conn.

After a reception at the home of the bride's parents, the couple left for a wedding trip to Boca Grande, Fla. They will live in Savannah.

The bride is a graduate of Ashley Hall and Sweet Briar College. Mr. McIntosh was graduated from St. Andrews School in Middletown, Del., and the University of North Carolina, where he was a member of Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity. He served two years in the Navy and is employed by International Naval Stores in Savannah.

G. C. Voorhees To Head Choir School

There will be few alumni by the time this Newsletter comes out who will not have learned already that Coerte Voorhees is leaving St. Andrew's School this June to take up his duties as the headmaster of the Choir School of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine in New York. And it is a safe bet that there will be no alumnus who does not feel first dismay at the thought that St. Andrew's is losing Coerte and Lois Voorhees and then joy at the thought that they, who more than most people welcome challenges, are about to take on a new job in which their enthusiasm, their concern for the happiness of others, their strong Christian commitment, and, perhaps most important of all at a time when a common grey-ness seems to silver-over everything in the educational world, their unique ability to be unabashedly themselves.

There can be no easy summing up of Coerte Voorhees' 27 year career at St. Andrew's School, for to the alumni and to the parents of St. Andreans, to many of whom Coerte and Lois were St. Andrew's School, he was many things. It is hard to think of a man who did the outstanding things he did with such flair as having over the years performed quietly and unobtrusively many of the routine chores without which the school simply does not operate. Since his having been made Director of Program in 1955 he has somehow managed to channel the diverse enthusiasms, whims, antipathies of some 200 people into a coherent and deceptively effortless plan. At the same time he has contrived by a prodigious use of tact and forbearance to strike a balance in the entertainment program between the improvers of the shining hour, who would have nothing but Bartok quarters and lectures on symbolic logic, and the more relaxed who would feel offended by anything above the cultural level of "I Was a Teen-age Guard in a Girls' Reform School."

ist as a routine accomplishment, yet for 27 years he has cheerfully submitted his great talent to the most demanding of routines, playing for the daily Chapel service. Choir directors have come and gone. When they have been unusually mercurial, he has steadied the situation; when they have been non-existent, he has taken over to direct the choir with the sensitivity and good taste that mark all of his undertakings. Whenever any musical organization has needed his help, he has been ready to supply it unobtrusively and effectively. He has played piano for the dance band, he has directed glee clubs, any many a time he has either at the keyboard of a piano or at the mighty console of his famous reed organ demonstrated the fact that music too can be approached with verve and wit.

Just as everything Coerte has done in planning the school program and in enlivening the school's musical activities keeps popping out of a classification as routine, so do his efforts in all other fields resist being crammed into the terms in series so convenient to the perfunctory eulogist. He advised the Class of '50 (with Lois in the background busily baking birthday cakes), and no class before or since has felt that their advisor was so personally involved with the well-being of each of them. Boys who have been in his Latin classes know that teaching machines become a pallid joke in the light of "the flashing neon," and that real teaching like any other activity involving human beings demands personal engagement. This is not to say that Coerte Voorhees has reduced the teaching of Latin to a minor campaign in the battle for the mind of the St. Andrew's schoolboy; he has carried the war abroad as both a member and Chairman of the Latin Examining Committee of the S.E.B. That the SAS new kitchen is the model of efficiency that it is is largely owing to his insistence that old mistakes be not repeated. The same man who could concern himself with such details as where waiters should leave trays won in 1955 a Fulbright teaching fellowship to Greece.

Finally it is significant that a man who so well exemplified in teaching and administration the classical virtues of balance should add a success in coaching to his other achievements. There have been few undefeated varsity athletic teams in the history of St. Andrew's School; one of these was Coerte Voorhees' National Senior Schoolboy Champion Four in 1948. His 1949 four was also undefeated in the regular season but was a victim of a last minute surge by a powerful Belleville Crew in the finals of the Nationals. Seven other excellent crews were overshadowed by the mighty feats of '48 and '49; however there's not a boy who has been in the rowing program of St. Andrew's, from club to varsity, who has not absorbed some of the zest for the sport that has always been generated when G.C.V. steps into a crew launch.

It's not surprising that one of the younger faculty members has said of Coerte Voorhees, "He's my idea of the perfect school-master."

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Dear Sir:

It seems that it's an unwritten rule at St. Andrew's that one can praise a master only after he learns that the master is leaving the school. The rule will probably remain in force long after each of us here now is gone, perhaps because only with the realization that a master is leaving, we find what his absence will mean to the school.

Along these lines, I would like to express for the entire student body in words what the three minute round of applause which we gave Mr. Voorhees meant, when we realized that he would no longer be with the school. Each student thought his own thoughts after Mr. Moss gave his "good and bad news." I thought of the man who has run the entertainment program since I've been here; the man who ran to the lightswitch yelling "flashing neon"; the man who taught us the Latin National Anthem; the man who has been more than an accompanist to the choir; the man angry; the man happy. And it seems that I summed all this up when I applauded the man Coerte Voorhees.

In one case this year, we never got a chance to applaud a great man, but after he was gone we saw a spot which never can be, never will be filled. It was too late to show him that we knew this.

Were that rule any different, were our minds different, we would be thanking most of the masters here. But they are not; so I can only say, "Thank you, Mr. Fleming. Thank you, Mr. Voorhees. The weight of your departures weigh heavy upon us."

Most Sincerely,
One of Many.

Grumman Ship Does 60 Knots With Her Wings in Water

By BYRON PORTERFIELD

Special to The New York Times

OYSTER BAY, L. I., Nov. 10 —Capt. William P. O. Clarke Jr. is a test pilot who flies over the water at 60 knots with his wings partially submerged.

The 41-year-old former naval officer is skipper of a sleek 104-foot hydrofoil ship being built and tested for the Maritime Administration by the Grumman Aircraft Engineering Corporation.

A company official said that Captain Clarke, a 1943 graduate of the Naval Academy, with four years' service on destroyers, had had more experience operating high-speed hydrofoil ships than any other pilot in the business.

Designed for 60 knots maximum speed with her surface-piercing foils, the $5,000,000 craft can be seen flashing down Long Island Sound at that speed with Captain Clarke using only three-quarters throttle.

Flying Principles Involved

Although water is 800 times more dense than air, aircraft flying principles are involved when the foil system lifts the hull of the Denison out of the water and hurtles the craft along five feet above the surface.

"We feel very strongly that the hydrofoil craft is a very dynamic vessel that must be flown," Capt. Clarke said.

The pilot house of the Denison gives the appearance of a roomy version of the cockpit of a jet transport aircraft. Its controls, furnishings and general "hardware" all are of aircraft design.

The resemblance to aircraft is apparent throughout the ship. Hull framing, plumbing, wiring and furnishings were engineered for strength and weight-saving factors. As in aircraft, the lighter the craft, the greater the cargo and passenger capacity.

"The motion sensation at 60 knots in the Denison is similar to that of riding the Lexington Avenue subway on a long express run; speed with quick little rocking movements from side to side," Captain Clarke said.

The designers and test crew of the Denison, discussing the safety of the vessel for open-sea passenger service, said that "almost nothing can happen to jeopardize the ship or its passengers."

"Most things that can happen to cause the Denison to lose flying attitude simply would bring the vessel down on her hull," Captain Clarke said. "We

He listed engine stalls, a sudden change in attitude of the foil's control surfaces, sheering a foil off by striking a reef or heavy flotsam, and extreme roll or pitch as some of the possible causes for losing flying attitude.

Captain Clarke's experience in high-speed hydrofoil operation started several years ago with the XCH-4 an experimental half scale model of a 100-foot anti-submarine vessel. When new, the ship, designed to do 60 miles an hour, was flown at 94 miles an hour.

Later he was a member of the team that developed the fibre-glass and aluminum hydrofoil kits for small outboard runabouts that Grumman now manufactures.

Patterns Predictable

As a result of tests with the manned model, all flight characteristics of the Denison have been predictable, according to Captain Clarke. Take-off techniques handling at various speeds in several types of water and landings have been checked out with the results of the model tests.

Captain Clarke explained that the time element was so short in executing maneuvers and handling emergency situations that the traditional bridge concept of controlling a commercial vessel was not feasible aboard high-speed hydrofoils.

The Denison will be turned over to the Maritime Administration after all tests on Long Island Sound and in open ocean waters have been completed next year.

A company official said that Captain Clarke, a 1943 graduate of the Naval Academy, with four years' service on destroyers, had had more experience operating high-speed hydrofoil ships than any other pilot in the business.

Captain Clarke's current command is the 90-ton H. S. (hydrofoil ship) Denison, an experimental oceangoing ship powered by an 18,000-horsepower gas turbine aircraft-type of engine.

Designed for 60 knots maximum speed with her surface-piercing foils, the $5,000,000 craft can be seen flashing down Long Island Sound at that speed with Captain Clarke using only three-quarters throttle.

Flying Principles Involved

Although water is 800 times more dense than air, aircraft flying principles are involved when the foil system lifts the hull of the Denison out of the water and hurtles the craft along five feet above the surface.

"We feel very strongly that the hydrofoil craft is a very dynamic vessel that must be flown," Capt. Clarke said.

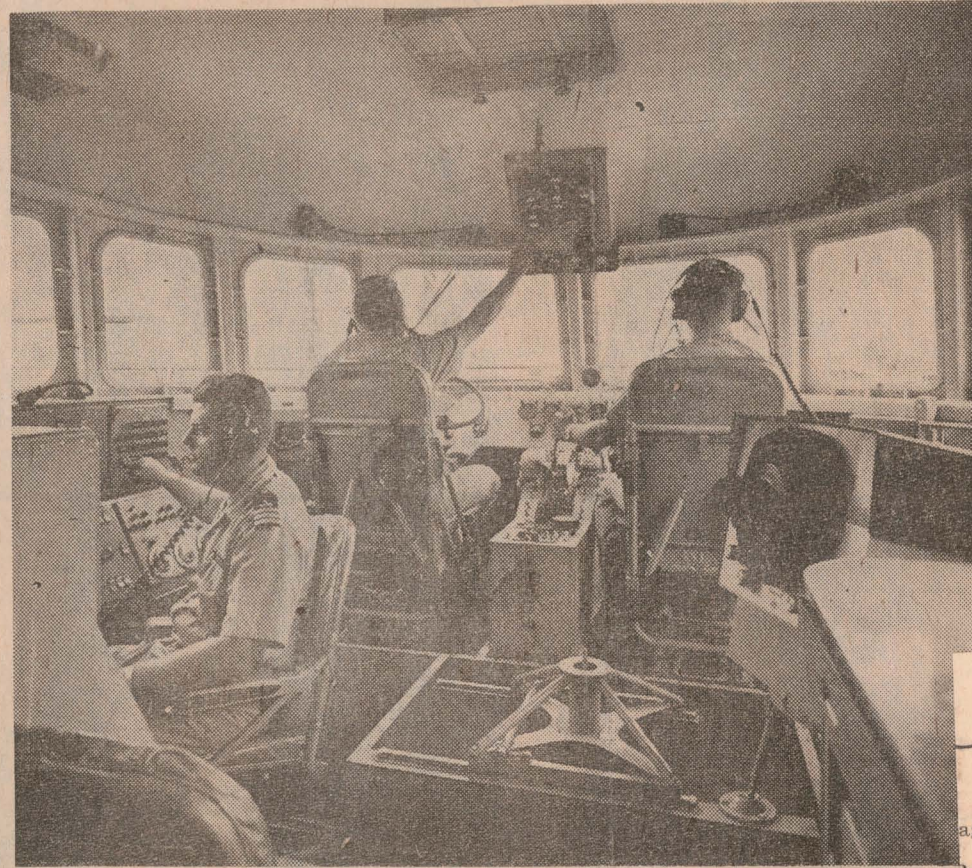

The pilot house of the Denison gives the appearance of a roomy version of the cockpit of a jet transport aircraft. Its controls, furnishings and general "hardware" all are of aircraft design.

The resemblance to aircraft is apparent throughout the ship. Hull framing, plumbing, wiring and furnishings were engineered for strength and weight-saving factors. As in aircraft, the lighter the craft, the greater the cargo and passenger capacity.

"The motion sensation at 60 knots in the Denison is similar to that of riding the Lexington Avenue subway on a long express run; speed with quick little rocking movements from side to side," Captain Clarke said.

The designers and test crew of the Denison, discussing the safety of the vessel for open-sea passenger service, said that "almost nothing can happen to jeopardize the ship or its passengers."

"Most things that can happen to cause the Denison to lose flying attitude simply would bring the vessel down on her hull," Captain Clarke said. "We then would either take off again or proceed under power by her displacement engines."

He listed engine stalls, a sudden change in attitude of the foil's control surfaces, sheering a foil off by striking a reef or heavy flotsam, and extreme roll or pitch as some of the possible causes for losing flying attitude.

Captain Clarke's experience in high-speed hydrofoil operation started several years ago with the XCH-4 an experimental half scale model of a 100-foot anti-submarine vessel. When new, the ship, designed to do 60 miles an hour, was flown at 94 miles an hour.

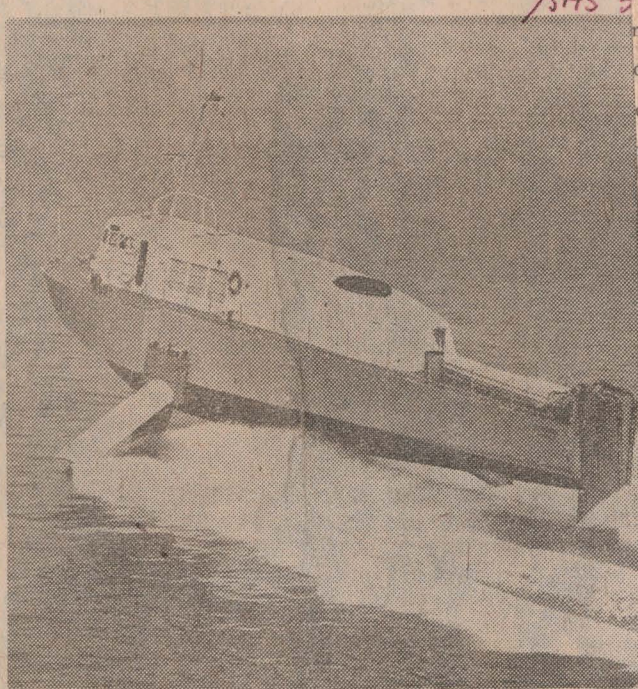

Later he was a member of the team that developed the fiberglass and aluminum hydrofoil kits for small outboard runabouts that Grumman now manufactures.

Patterns Predictable

As a result of tests with the manned model, all flight characteristics of the Denison have been predictable, according to Captain Clarke. Take-off techniques handling at various speeds in several types of water and landings have been checked out with the results of the model tests.

Captain Clarke explained that the time element was so short in executing maneuvers and handling emergency situations that the traditional bridge concept of controlling a commercial vessel was not feasible aboard high-speed hydrofoils.

Walden Pell In Saigon

People at St. Andrew's reacted to the Cuban crisis in much the same way that people all over the rest of the world must have reacted. The boys did what admirals and generals are usually accused of doing—fought the next war in terms of the last—and there was much talk of being drafted, choosing a branch of the service, resuming education after a romantic but necessarily vague connection with nuclear warfare, and experiencing a break in the monotony of going to St. Andrew's School.

Those who could not imagine the threatening disaster in terms of a 1942 movie about World War II probably made all sorts of secret resolutions to "do something about it" if they escaped the holocaust this time. It may have occurred to these people that Walden Pell has been doing something

ASSIGNMENT SAIGON

A pioneer Episcopal missionary reports on the Church's service in the midst of a hot "cold war" in Vietnam

By WALDEN PELL II

IT WAS early in February, near the end of the cool season in Vietnam. Summoned by a phone call before dawn, we threaded our way through a maze of small, pailote-thatched houses in the outskirts of Saigon. The only sounds were the reedy quacking of ducks, the crowing of a cock, and the sleepy cry of a child. Our way was lighted by the candles on Buddhist shrines celebrating the lunar New Year or Tet, as the Vietnamese call it.

We turned in at a lighted doorway and saw the slight, emaciated body of a sixteen-year-old girl lying on a cot. Nguyen-thi Chanh was dying of cancer. They had called us from the Adventist Hospital to say that her family had taken her home that morning for her last hours with them. Her mother, a fine Buddhist woman who had been our servant, had asked me to baptize Chanh when we came to see her in the hospital, and I had done so. Now her uncle, a recently confirmed Anglican, took her baptismal certificate, a brightly illuminated card in English and Chinese, and propped it against her pillow. Up on the wall a small figure of Buddha looked down from a modest altar. Chanh's mother squatted by the bedside wailing in a kind of singsong chant. But Chanh was a Christian, ready to meet her Saviour and to inherit the riches of the kingdom of heaven.

Later that morning Chanh breathed her last, labored breath. Her English-speaking cousin, also a communicant of our church, came to discuss the funeral arrangements with us. The procession would come to the church, and there we would read the burial office. But the cemetery was some distance out of town. Americans are not allowed to venture outside Saigon except by plane. So we arranged that Dang, the cousin, would read the service at the grave, and gave him a marked prayer book and a Vietnamese translation of the Lord's Prayer and Apostles' Creed that we use for instructing catechumens.

Our ministry the evening before had a different flavor. We had dined at the Club Nautique de Saigon's upper-deck restaurant with a young American couple, the William Harpers. Nancy is a devout Episcopalian; and Bill, a Naval lieutenant in the U.S. Military Assistance Advisory Group, was brought up as a Methodist. He had taken some instruction and had read some Anglican books. Now he wanted to be confirmed when the Bishop of Singapore and Malaya came to Saigon the following week (he was, with four other Americans, an English girl, and three Vietnamese).

We went back to their apartment after dinner and sat on the balcony overlooking one of the beautiful boulevards the French laid out so lavishly in Saigon. As the holiday crowds strolled on the pavements below, we discussed the step the lieutenant was about to take and its bearing on his former Christian tradition and his married life. Then we had coffee and heard a tape-recording of their recent wedding at the French Reformed Church, which our congregation uses. Even the accidental dropping of the ring by the priest-in-charge, and its bounces on the tile floor, came through perfectly.

Officially our Anglican work in Vietnam, Cambodia, and Laos is a "chaplaincy" in the old colonial sense, organized to serve the spiritual needs of Episcopalians and British Commonwealth Anglicans. But the commission the Rt. Rev. Henry W. Baines gave me in 1960, when he was Bishop of Singapore and Malaya, was to undertake an "Anglican Mission in Indo-China"; and inevitably, because this is Christian work, we are reaching out as a mission to the people of these countries, and especially the Vietnamese. That evening with the Harpers was, technically speaking, an example of "chaplaincy"; the next morning, at Chanh's bedside, was an example of "mission." I suppose, though obviously there is no real distinction for a Christian between them.

The contrast between that evening and the next morning is typical of the many contrasts and tensions of the area included in the watershed of the mighty Mekong River, the locale of "The Anglican-Episcopal Congregations of the Mekong," now officially known as "The Missionary District of the Mekong."

The elaborate three-day celebration of the lunar New Year, with practically all shops closed and the servants "off," and the colorful unicorn or dragon dances and processions in the adjacent Chinese city of Cholon, shows the attachment of the Vietnamese to the lunar calendar they adopted during a the Synod (a "missionary district" in this diocese is more like a convocation or rural deanery in the United States). We publish a quarterly journal, The Mekong Messenger, and a newsletter. Our Bishop, the Rt. Rev. C. Kenneth Sansbury, formerly Warden of St. Augustine's College, Canterbury, visited all three congregations early in 1962, and we have also had visits from the Rt. Rev. Roland Koh, Bishop Suffragan in Kuala Lumpur; from Bishop Daly of Korea (at Phnom Penh); and from Bishop Mosley of Delaware, Bishop Gibson of Virginia, and Bishop Kennedy of Honolulu (at Saigon).

Our relations with the other Christian churches are close and cordial, and we have many good friends among the Baptist, Evangelical, French Reformed, and Roman Catholic clergy, and the military chaplains who have arrived in recent months. There are few reminders here of denominational differences, and little interest in them.

The Diocese of Singapore and Malaya covers seven nations. In Singapore and Malaya it works through many parishes, missions, schools, hospitals, and clinics, but a large proportion of their personnel are missionaries supported by the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, Church Missionary Society, Overseas Missionary Fellowship, and other overseas societies. In the other five countries the diocese has but three resident clergy; one for Thailand, at Bangkok; one for Indonesia, at Djakarta; and the writer for Vietnam, Cambodia, and Laos. The diocese itself has neither manpower nor money at this time to expand the work in these outlying territories, and if it were not for the vision and generosity of the Overseas Department of the Episcopal Church and the many donors to our special fund, we could not have undertaken this mission.

Both Bishop Sansbury and Bishop Koh have urged us to concentrate on the English-speaking Anglicans to whom we were originally commissioned to minister, rather than to seek out converts from among the local people. We welcome those who come to us and offer instruction, Baptism, and confirmation to those who wish them, but we do not pursue converts in any systematic way.

The time may come when we shall be called to undertake positive and evangelistic "missionary work" in the more technical sense. Meanwhile we are thankful for the chance to carry on a "chaplaincy," for such a ministry is certainly needed here.

Our large "Western" community lives under extraordinary strains and pressures. A doctor in Saigon remarked that he had never seen a larger percentage of people suffering from nervous tension. Vietnam is a country at war, and even the security measures that must be employed tend to produce an atmosphere of emotional insecurity.

The temptations of the flesh are present here in full force, despite recent legislation against dancing, gambling, and vice in general. An increasing number of young American soldiers is arriving weekly, many of them with only a hurried and sketchy briefing. All too easily they can fall prey to the seductive charms of the local sirens.

Against all this our churches offer "the spirit of counsel and ghostly strength; the spirit of knowledge and in confidence." We Anglicans are an enigma to most people here, who know Christianity through either Roman Catholicism or evangelical Protestantism. And some of them are coming to see that we offer a middle ground between these two ends of the Christian spectrum.

Plenty of difficulties confront any new church program in these countries. There is the constant and rapid turnover of Western Christians, epitomized in the Vietnamese expression, "di, di, lai, lai" (go, go, come, come). The intricacies of the Vietnamese, Cambodian, and Lao languages are a formidable barrier to communication. Armed conflict and subversive influences produce an unsettled atmosphere, to put it mildly. And there is an elusive, undependable quality about things that makes it difficult to plan ahead.

Yet we are persuaded that it is pos-true godliness" through their ministry of the Word and Sacraments. Further, they bring together people of differing national, racial, and professional backgrounds in the fellowship of the Body of Christ. And they project into the unfamiliar life here the firm values, ideals, and moral controls from home.

Above all our churches are centers for the regular liturgical and corporate worship of Almighty God, in lands where many know Him not as He is revealed in Jesus Christ. As we gather in our borrowed places of worship and offer our praise and prayers, we feel a fresh and heightened sense of reality and power in what we are doing.

So our congregations carry on their work of chaplaincy "in quietness and sible and urgently important to maintain an "Anglican presence" in these countries against the day when life will be more settled and the rising tide of Christian reunion will reach here.

Then, in God's providence, our church will be on hand to contribute its riches in liturgy, church order, and zeal for the truth of the gospel to an indigenous and comprehensive church along the Mekong, a church that will be "truly Catholic, truly Evangelical, and truly Reformed." Chaplaincy and mission will flow together in one stream, so that we can proclaim:

"There is a river, the streams whereof make glad the city of God; the holy place of the tabernacle of the Most Highest" (PSALMS 46:4).

Merry Christmas

Unusual features of the contemporarily designed building include a cantilevered circular staircase in the lobby, 120 ft. clear interior span, radiant heat, attractive entrance canopy, and blue vinyl coated steel siding. The stairs, canopy and other steel work were fabricated locally by Midlantic. A two story sixty foot expanse of glass on the building's southern exposure contribute spaciousness and good lighting to modern offices.

Tidewater Publishing Corporation began operation in Queenstown August 1st, 1959. As the new firm grew it required additional production space and in the fall of 1961 purchased a tract of land on Route 301 near Centerville. Construction of the new plant began almost simultaneously and by April 1962 the present building was completed.

Although the company enjoys handling a variety of printing requirements, its principal sales are in specialized work utilizing giant offset presses which print on paper in rolls at speeds from six to ten miles an hour. The process, termed web lithography, produces millions of forms, circulars, wrappers, or labels daily. In January the firm opened a New York City sales office. Current expansion plans include addition of a 42-in. web press to existing production facilities and establishment of a Washington sales office later this year.

Today, the school offers teaching from kindergarten

The original structure on Randolph Avenue in 1959 was judged to be adequate for six years. The school outgrew the building the first year, and a local fund raising campaign for $186,000 was launched in Huntsville communities to build a new building.

Current expansion plans include another building on the Drake Avenue site, which will include a gymnasium.

Heading the school is Rev.

"... T. S. Eliot isn't cool ... he's a square ..."

"... The beatniks have had it. They're out."

"... Washington is 'monumental, beautiful.'"

Novelist White, as Tart as Shaw, Finds Eliot Out but Washington In

By Jean M. White

Staff Reporter
T. H. (Terence Hanbury) White doesn't give opinions. He hands down pronouncements from behind a bush of a white beard.

Yesterday the bearded English novelist ("The Once and Future King," better known as the musical "Camelot," and the film, "The Sword in the Stone"), had this to pronounce:

"T. S. Eliot is due for the chop. Eliot is no longer cool. He's square. He's out. But he'll return in 25 years."

"The beatniks themselves have had it. They're out."

"It's a terrible book. Don't read it. It was written when I was a young man," he said in a curt dismissal of a word of praise for "England Have My Bones," one of his early books.

"I won't say a word about Walt Disney. Now on with it." (Disney has filmed in cartoon form "The Sword and the Stone.")

"Don't say a word against Washington. It's a monumental city, a dramatic, a beautiful city, and I mean just that."

White, who looks like a well-nourished George Bernard Shaw and acts the same, spoke last night at the Library of Congress on "Poets Unfashionable."

Today's unfashionable poets, as he explains it, are those of the World War I poets become unfashionable as they take on a father image:

"Young men don't want to be like their father. One gets tired of daddy and calls him a stupid old man. When he becomes a grandfather, he is allowed to speak again."

This cycle, he feels, has caught up with Eliot.

As for himself, White recently published some verses privately because he doesn't care what other people think.

"I'll probably be one of those poets who get discovered long after they are dead," he observed wryly.

As a novelist, White has been discovered long before that. Two of his books have been Book-of-the-Month selections. But success hasn't spoiled White's disdain for literary popularity, which he once defined as a matter of "good luck assisted by bad writing."

But there is no disdain for Washington, and White yesterday was paraphrasing
